ANGANWADI TEACHER TIED TO TREE IN TELANGANA, FIVE HELD

Hyderabad, April 9 (TSIT) : Five persons were arrested in Telangana's Sangareddy district on Thursday for tying an Anganwadi teacher to a tree over the alleged financial cheating by her husband, police said. The shocking incident took place in Rasole village in Kangti mandal on Wednesday. Few villagers tied Vasanta Kumari to a tree with a rope and humiliated her as her husband, Prabhakar, had allegedly cheated them in the name of a finance company. Prabhakar had collected money from some villagers in Ramaragidda village under "HBM Finance" and fled. Angered over this, some villagers went to Rasole, where Vasanta Kumari was attending duty.

India reviews preparedness amid West Asia developments

Visakhapatnam, April 10 (TSIT): In view of the evolving situation in West Asia, the Government of India conducted a comprehensive review of the country's preparedness during a high-level meeting of the Informal Group of Ministers (IGoM), chaired by Defence Minister Rajnath Singh.

The meeting was attended by senior Union Ministers including Finance Minister Nirmala Sitharaman, External Affairs Minister S. Jaishankar, Agriculture Minister Shivraj Singh Chouhan, Commerce and Industry Minister Piyush Goyal, and Petroleum Minister Hardeep Singh Puri, among other key officials.

During the meeting, Rajnath Singh stressed the importance of continuous preparedness, strong inter-departmental coordination, and resilience to address emerging challenges. He noted that the government, under the leadership of Prime Minister Narendra Modi, is taking proactive steps to safeguard citizens from the impact of global tensions.

sions. The government stated that India's energy supply remains stable despite disruptions in West Asia. LPG vessels have successfully navigated the strategic Strait of Hormuz, ensuring uninterrupted supply, with no shortages of domestic LPG cylinders reported.

To support vulnerable sections, the supply of smaller LPG cylinders has been increased, while public sector fuel outlets continue to meet rising demand. Industrial LPG allocation has been prioritised for critical sectors such as pharmaceuticals, agriculture, food processing, and manufacturing. Additionally, the government is promoting Piped Natural Gas (PNG), with a rise in new connections to reduce dependence on LPG. The Centre assured uninterrupted availability of essential commodities, including petrol, diesel, fertilisers, and food items, with continuous monitoring mechanisms in place to prevent shortages.

Adequate buffer stocks of rice and wheat are available to meet both routine and emergency needs, and the Public Distribution System (PDS) is functioning smoothly. Under the Open Market Sale Scheme (OMSS), surplus food grains can be released to stabilise prices and control inflation if required.

Procurement for the Rabi Marketing Season 2026-27 has commenced under Minimum Support

Price (MSP) operations, with coordination between the Centre and states to ensure logistics and packaging support.

The government also reported comfortable availability of edible oils due to steady imports and improved domestic production, with mustard output expected to rise. The sugar sector remains stable with sufficient production and steady exports.

The Department of Consumer Affairs is monitoring prices of key commodities nationwide. While no major price volatility has been observed, a moderate rise in edible oil prices has been noted. The government is also preparing to procure onions to stabilise market prices and support farmers.

The IGoM concluded that India is well-prepared to handle any potential impact arising from the West Asia situation, with continuous monitoring, proactive decision-making, and coordinated efforts ensuring economic stability and uninterrupted supply of essential goods across the country.

Netanyahu orders direct Lebanon talks as Beirut death toll rises to 303

Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu said he has instructed his Cabinet to begin direct negotiations with Lebanon, with a focus on disarming Hezbollah and establishing peace relations between the two countries. In a statement issued by his office on Thursday, April 9, Netanyahu said the move follows repeated requests from Lebanon to open direct talks with Israel and that negotiations should begin "as soon as possible". He added that discussions would centre on dismantling Hezbollah's military capabilities and advancing towards formalised relations. Reacting to the development, Iran's Foreign Minister Abbas Araghchi criticised the Israeli leader, linking the diplomatic push to his ongoing legal troubles. Writing on X, he said a region-wide ceasefire, including in Lebanon, could hasten Netanyahu's jailing as his corruption trial resumes. Direct talks between Israel and Lebanon are expected to begin next week, according to Barak Ravid, with Washington likely to host the first Iran Supreme Leader outlines demands, signals tougher Hormuz stance. Iran's Supreme Leader Mojtaba Khamenei said Tehran will seek compensation for losses and injuries caused during the conflict, signalling a firm negotiating position despite the ongoing ceasefire. In a statement carried by state media, he said Iran would "not back off" from pursuing what it described as its legitimate rights, including those of the wider "resistance front", referring to its regional allies. He also called on pro-Iran supporters to take to the streets, saying public mobilisation could influence the outcome of negotiations. round.

Ensuring income, dignity and sustainability of weavers a top priority: Yogi

Lucknow, April 9 : Uttar Pradesh Chief Minister, Yogi Adityanath, on Thursday said that ensuring the income, dignity and long-term sustainability of weavers remains a top priority for the state government, underlining the need for a comprehensive and coordinated approach to address challenges faced by the sector.

Chairing a review meeting of the Handloom Department, Chief Minister Adityanath said, "Weavers are not just carriers of tradition but also a strong pillar of the state's economy. Therefore, ensuring their income, dignity, and livelihood stability is among the government's top priorities."

He noted that weavers currently face challenges such as rising raw material costs, lack of modern design and technology, and limited market access. "Such challenges cannot be resolved through schemes alone. A robust, result-oriented and cluster-based system must be developed," he said, directing officials to prepare a practical action plan focussed on cluster-based development.

During the meeting, officials informed that around 1.99 lakh weavers are engaged in the sector in the state, with Uttar Pradesh ranking sixth nationally.

The state has a leading position in the production of carpets, durries and mats, along with a strong presence in bedsheets, furnishings, and blankets.

In 2024-25, India's total handloom exports stood at Rs 1,178.93 crore, of which Uttar Pradesh contributed Rs 109.40 crore, accounting for about 9.27 per cent.

Emphasising the need to identify weaver-dominated regions, the Chief Minister directed the development of clusters that integrate production, quality control, and marketing. He said these clusters should function on a value chain model, covering design, branding, packaging and market access rather than being limited to production alone. The meeting also discussed cluster selection, baseline surveys, preparation of Detailed Project Reports (DPRs), implementation and monitoring. The Chief Minister suggested organising a limited number of weavers into registered units within each cluster to encourage collective production and marketing, while also linking them with modern technology, advanced tools and skill development programmes.

Highlighting the importance of design and market alignment, Yogi Adityanath stressed the effective implementation of mechanisms such as designer-cum-marketing executives and design houses or export agencies to enhance product quality and expand market reach.

He further called for greater use of digital platforms, e-commerce and branding initiatives to connect weavers directly with consumers.

CARE Hospitals Restores Hearing for Over 2,000 Patients with Advanced Stapedotomy Surgery

Hyderabad, April 9, 2026 – CARE Hospitals, Banjara Hills, has achieved a major milestone in hearing restoration, with Dr. N. Vishnu Swaroop Reddy successfully performing over 2,000 Stapedotomy surgeries. The advanced micro-ear procedure has restored hearing in patients suffering from Otosclerosis—a progressive but treatable cause of conductive hearing loss—as well as children with congenital hearing loss and those with rare bone disorders like Osteogenesis Imperfecta.

Stapedotomy involves replacing the immobilized stapes bone (the smallest in the human body) with a precision micro-prosthesis, often allowing patients to hear clearly immediately after surgery. Many adults undergo the procedure under local anesthesia, avoiding lifelong dependence on hearing aids.

Dr. Reddy's first 1,000 cases were published in the Journal of Laryngology & Otology (Cambridge, UK) in 2021, marking the largest published stapedotomy series from India and the second-largest worldwide. Over the past six years, another 1,000+ successful surgeries have followed, drawing patients from across India and abroad.

"Hearing loss quietly

erodes confidence and human connection," said Dr. Reddy. "The true milestone is the moment a patient hears clearly again—often after years of silence." Mr. Abhinav Joshi, COO of CARE Hospitals, Banjara Hills, added that the achievement reinforces that hearing loss is reversible with timely, expert care.

From Cancer Survivor to Marathon Runner: 40-Year-Old Woman's Inspiring Journey of Turning Pain into Power

Hyderabad, April 09, 2026 – Breast cancer is no longer a diagnosis to be viewed with fear alone. With timely intervention, proper treatment, and unwavering determination, patients can not only overcome the disease but return to a life full of purpose and passion. A 40-year-old woman treated at the Medicovert Cancer Institute, Hitec City, has proven exactly that – defeating Stage II breast cancer and transforming her survival into strength by becoming a marathon runner.

A few years ago, the patient was diagnosed with Stage II breast cancer (T1N1aM0). Further evaluation revealed that her cancer was hormone receptor positive (ER/PR+) and HER2 negative. In response, the multidisciplinary team at Medicovert Cancer Institute swiftly designed a comprehensive, personalized treatment plan.

She underwent breast conservation surgery, followed by adjuvant chemotherapy and radiation therapy. Given the hormone-sensitive nature of her disease, she was also placed on long-term hormone therapy alongside ovarian suppression injections. Despite the grueling physical and emotional toll of treatment, she remained resolute, following every medical recommendation with discipline and an unshakeable positive spirit.

Today, five years after completing treatment, she remains completely healthy and cancer-free. More importantly, she has returned to her greatest passion – running. She is now actively participating in marathons, with every race serving as a powerful symbol of her victory over cancer and her remarkable physical and mental resilience.

Speaking on the occasion, Dr. Venugopal, Senior Medical Oncologist at Medicovert Cancer Institute, Hitec City, said: "Breast cancer is not the end of life. If detected early, it is highly treatable and, in many cases, completely curable. This patient's journey is a powerful message of hope for women everywhere. She has shown that it is possible not only to survive cancer but to come back stronger and achieve personal goals. Fear and anxiety are natural during treatment, but with the right medical care, family support, and a positive attitude, patients can successfully overcome cancer."

Doctors also emphasized that breast cancer cases are increasingly being seen in younger women. They urged regular screening, self-examination, and early consultation with specialists. Symptoms such as a lump in the breast, pain, changes in breast shape, or skin alterations should never be ignored, as early detection dramatically improves the chances of successful treatment. This inspiring story serves as a powerful reminder: cancer is not the end – it can, in fact, be the beginning of a new life filled with strength, hope, and determination.

AMIKA at Five: An Indian Startup in Dispute Resolution That Went Global

HYDERABAD (TSIT) Five years ago, on April 9, 2021, the AMIKA Arbitration and Mediation Council (AAMC) was established following the recommendations of the Justice B.N. Srikrishna Committee on the institutionalisation of arbitration. What began as a local initiative has now evolved into an internationally recognised dispute resolution institution, offering a peaceful alternative to India's overburdened court system. Dr. P. Madhava Rao, Registrar of AAMC, announced today that over 500 parties involved in matrimonial, family, and property disputes have successfully sought and found resolution through the centre. This achievement comes at a critical time, with over 50 million cases currently pending in the Indian judicial system, leaving countless litigants trapped in lengthy and expensive court battles.

AAMC positions itself as a vital bridge between the traditional adversarial system and modern restorative justice. Dr. Rao explained that the centre's growing popularity stems from its ability to demonstrate to the public that even deep-seated family conflicts can be settled in a peaceful atmosphere—without ever stepping into a courtroom.

BUILDING CAPACITY, GAINING GLOBAL TRUST

Over the past five years, AAMC has conducted four intensive 40-hour training programs, producing 50 skilled mediators by following the curriculum developed by the Mediation and Conciliation Project Committee (MCPC) of the Supreme Court of India. The institution's excellence has received international validation from the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL), which approved Amika's Arbitration and Mediation Rules for resolving international commercial disputes. Further demonstrating its global reach, AAMC has designed and implemented "Training of Trainers" programs for lawyers in Myanmar.

On the domestic front, the Indian government has recognized the centre's expertise by inviting it to provide advice on mediation legislation. Additionally, national stock exchanges now utilize AAMC's mediators and arbitrators to settle investment-related conflicts.

A PHILOSOPHY ROOTED IN CORE VALUES

Beyond administrative efficiency, AAMC's success is built on an organisational philosophy based on core values rather than a purely commercial mindset. Unlike many business-oriented firms, AMIKA views disputes holistically—particularly in marital cases, where the priority is to reunite couples or provide fair settlements that protect women's rights and preserve family ties. The centre has registered over 500 cases involving sensitive issues such as matrimonial disputes, child custody, and property division. Notably, 60% of these cases involve young couples seeking resolution within the first week of marriage—a significant shift in social trends. Dr. Rao highlighted that many disputes are resolved in just one or two sessions, allowing the parties to leave as friends rather than enemies.

RECOGNITION AND THE ROAD AHEAD

The Telangana High Court has recently forwarded AAMC's request for official recognition to the state government. The centre's unique case management system is built on the pillars of confidentiality, transparency, and speed. Unlike public court proceedings, all mediation details are kept strictly private.

The Real Reason China Stayed 'Quiet' About Its US-Iran Ceasefire Role

Pakistan's media is ecstatic. After all, it was the country's apparent mediation that paused a disastrous war, and it is probably going to host the first delegation as early as next week. This is Pakistan's moment in the sun, or so it seems. But a tweet posted by the Prime Minister exposed embarrassingly enough that there might have literally been a US handle working the mediation machine. Standing quietly in the shadows is China. Its Foreign Minister has been busy, having made some 26 calls recently. It is also to host the US President soon. Meanwhile, Trump acknowledged Beijing's intervention in a single line. That counts for something. From this mess, some will emerge as winners. Others will scramble to clean up the dust.

The Key Motivation To Mediate

At first sight, Pakistan's diplomatic cup seems to be overflowing. Iran's Foreign Minister, Abbas Araghchi, has expressed gratitude and appreciation on X for the 'brotherly country' of Pakistan, though not just praising Prime Minister Shahbaz Sharif but also Field Marshal Asim Munir. That should cloud the former's already knitted brow a bit. But Munir has apparently been working the lines the whole night, talking to the US and Iranian negotiators, all of which adds considerably to his stature. That's a big plus for his longevity in a country where former political heads or even army chiefs have had a sticky end. Consider that former Chief of Army Staff Javed Bajwa died un-mourned and mysteriously recently. The biggest win for Munir, and for his country, however, cannot be publicised. And that is, keeping Pakistan out of the Iran-Saudi war, and thereby sliding out of implementing last year's 'Strategic Mutual Defence Agreement'. That was a black-and-white commitment that required Islamabad to aid the Saudis if they were attacked. When the first drone attack hit, the Saudis summoned the Field Marshal, with Defence Minister Prince Khalid posting pointedly that the two had discussed the attacks "and the measures needed to halt them within the framework of our Joint Strategic Defence Agreement". Any support to the Saudis would have had Iran venting its wrath on Pakistan, with a couple of missiles landing in its capital. An already enraged Shia population, which was told by an arrogant Munir to "go to Iran" if it so wished, would have risen up against the army. A catastrophe was averted with the mediation exercises. Danger again came perilously close when Iran recently hit the Jubail Petrochemical complex days ago, which led to Sharif yet again thanking Riyadh for its "restraint". It's not over, though. Even after the declaration of the ceasefire, a vital pipeline that bypasses the Hormuz has been hit. That could upset the apple cart.

Fronting For The US

Into all this desperation came the US. The New York Times story confirms that a tweet, posted ostensibly by the Pakistan PM, was in fact drafted in the White House. Trump couldn't be seen as asking for a ceasefire, so he got Pakistan to 'front' the exercise, while pulling the levers behind. Recall that the tweet was mistakenly posted as 'Draft: Pakistan PM's message on X' calling for an extension to the deadline to the US, and cooperation from "Iranian brothers". It was a dead giveaway. Then came another kerfuffle. Sharif again posted that Iran and the US, "along with their allies", would also implement the ceasefire in Lebanon. That was denied almost immediately by Vice President JD Vance, who said the ceasefire was Iran-focused. Yet another post earlier by Sharif, appealing for an end to attacks by all parties, was marked to everyone but Israel. Clearly, the perils of a mediation exercise are immense when the mediator doesn't recognise one of the central parties to the war. Pakistan's passport explicitly states that travel to Israel is barred. It seems then that a Prime Minister cannot acknowledge its existence in a post on X.

After all, what did the war bring?

PRIYANKA SAURABH

(Civilization, balance, and humanity in danger)

The world once again appears to be at a crossroads where the voice of humanity is drowned out by displays of power, threats, and military activity. Recent events have renewed the question of what war truly achieves. Is it merely a display of strength, or does it hold a lasting solution? History and experience both confirm that war does not end any problem, but rather gives rise to an endless series of new ones. Today, as instability in the global landscape grows, this question becomes even more pressing.

War is often initiated in the name of national security, self-defense, or honor, but its consequences are far more widespread and devastating. After a war, even the so-called victors are weakened from within. Their economies are severely strained, resources are wasted, and social structures begin to crumble. This has a direct negative impact on areas such as education, health, and development. On the other hand, defeated countries are already buried under the rubble of destruction, where the process of reconstruction can last for years, and generations pay the price. In this entire process, ordinary citizens suffer the most, who neither directly contributed to the war nor had any influence on the decision-making process.

War not only brings physical destruction, but it also leaves deep wounds at the psychological and cultural level. Displacement, fear, insecurity, and mental trauma are conditions that affect societies long after the war.

Children, women, and the elderly are most affected. Their normal course of life is disrupted, and they are thrust into an uncertain future. Civilizations that develop over thousands of years can crumble in a matter of days or months. Recent events also demonstrate that external attacks and pressure, rather than weakening a country, can make it more organized and aggressive. When a nation is constantly under pressure, nationalism becomes stronger. People set aside their internal differences and unite against the external threat. Thus, the very strategy adopted to subdue a country can ultimately empower it. It is one of the greatest ironies of war that it often fails to achieve even its stated objectives. The impact of war is not limited to the belligerent countries; its effects are felt globally. Vital sectors such as the international economy, trade routes, and energy supplies are directly affected. A crisis in sensitive sea lanes such as the Strait of Hormuz can impact global economic stability. The consequences, such as oil price fluctuations, supply chain disruptions, and investment uncertainty, are felt globally. The impact is even more severe for developing countries, whose economies are already dependent on limited resources. When superpowers become involved in a conflict, the situation becomes even more complex. Their intervention is not limited to the military, but also takes on diplomatic, economic, and strategic dimensions. This makes it difficult for small and medium-sized countries to articulate their positions. They often seek a balance that protects their national interests and avoids becoming involved in a larger conflict. However, maintaining this balance is not easy, as every decision has far-reaching consequences. West Asia is a prime example of such complex conflicts, where tensions persist for political, religious, and strategic reasons. The situation here suggests that even a small spark can escalate into a widespread conflict. The involvement of various countries and organizations has made the region even more sensitive. The impact of any development here is felt not only regionally but also globally. In this context, some countries have attempted to demonstrate balanced and mature diplomacy. They prioritized not only their own national interests but also global peace and stability. This is proof that solutions to complex situations can be found through dialogue and diplomacy. While this process may be slow and challenging, it is the most reliable path towards lasting peace. Another important dimension of warfare today is information and propaganda. War is no longer confined to the battlefield, but is also fought in the media and digital platforms. Information control, the spread of rumors, and attempts to influence public opinion have become integral parts of this conflict. This has made it even more difficult to distinguish between truth and falsehood. In the age of social media, even a small amount of misinformation can create widespread confusion and tension. Additionally, war has a serious impact on the environment. Bombing, the use of chemical weapons, and the destruction of industrial infrastructure cause long-term environmental damage. Water, air, and land pollution disrupt the natural balance. This has a negative impact on biodiversity, and this loss is often irreversible. Thus, war affects not only the current generation but also future generations. Ultimately, it is clear that war is not a permanent solution to any problem.

From Institution Builder to Life Mentor: The Journey of Dr. Vijay Garg

- Dr. Priyanka Saurabh

The world of education in India today is becoming increasingly entangled in a dazzling array of statistics, percentages, and rankings. The quality of schools and colleges is now judged by how many students top exams, secure prestigious jobs, and crack competitive examinations. But amidst this landscape, a fundamental question often goes unaddressed—is education merely a means to deliver results, or is it also a process of shaping human beings? A living answer to this question is Dr. Vijay Garg, whose life and work introduce us to the true meaning of education.

Dr. Vijay Garg's name cannot be remembered solely as an administrative officer or principal. He led educational institutions for nearly four decades, but his contributions transcended the boundaries of position or responsibility. He was one of those rare educators for whom education was not a profession, but a moral obligation. His personality embodies the simplicity of a teacher, the depth of a thinker, and the sensitivity of a guide.

His life is a testament to the fact that a true teacher is not merely a source of information, but one who ignites the fire of thought within students. He believed that the purpose of education was not to provide answers, but to cultivate the ability to ask questions. This was why students who came in contact with him not only passed exams but were also prepared to face life's complex questions. Dr. Garg's early life was spent in humble circumstances, but his thinking was extraordinary. He grew up in an environment where education was viewed not as a means to achieve social status, but as a responsibility. Despite limited resources, he pursued his education with dedication and commitment, ultimately earning a doctorate. However, he never made this achievement the center of his personality. For him, it was merely a stepping stone, not the ultimate goal. It was this humility and constant learning that set him apart. He believed that knowledge is never complete and that a teacher should remain a lifelong student. When he assumed the position of principal, he brought with him the idea that the head of any institution should first and foremost be a dedicated learner. This philosophy was clearly evident throughout his administrative career. He would arrive at school first thing in the morning and stay late. For him, this was not just a duty, but a spiritual practice. He understood every aspect of the school—classroom activities, teachers' problems, and students' needs. He approached problems not by issuing orders, but by understanding and solving them. His administrative style was characterized by sensitivity, not rigidity; by dialogue, not distance. He never considered teachers subordinates, but rather as colleagues. He never judged students solely by their roll numbers or results, but instead strived to develop them as complete individuals. For him, the measure of an institution's success was not exam results, but the character and thinking of the students who graduated. Dr. Garg's colleagues and students often recount his ability to recognize his students by name, even years later. This wasn't simply a matter of memory, but a testament to the deep connection he forged with them. He saw potential in every student and made every effort to fulfill that potential. Often, he would quietly help students who were falling behind. Sometimes by offering a piece of advice, sometimes by providing an opportunity, he shaped the lives of many. For him, education meant more than just teaching, but also holding the hand of anyone who was on the verge of falling.

Over time, when his formal tenure ended, he didn't turn to retirement as a means of relaxation. For him, it was simply a change in his approach to work. He separated himself from administrative responsibilities, but never from the world of ideas and contemplation. Today, he expresses his views on issues of education and society through his writings. His writings clearly reflect his depth of experience and clarity of thought. He writes on topics such as education policy, the challenges facing youth, and the decline of values, but his approach is always balanced and practical. He not only points out problems but also suggests solutions. His writing doesn't feel like a sermon, but rather like a dialogue. Readers feel as if they are talking to someone who has seen life closely, understood its complexities, and yet has not given up hope. Dr. Garg's influence wasn't limited to his institutions. His students are now making their mark in various fields—some as doctors, some as engineers, some as teachers, and some as administrative officers. But his greatest achievement isn't that his students were successful, but that they became sensitive and responsible citizens.

CELEBRATION OF SERVICE ON DAUGHTER'S BIRTHDAY

(A gamut of emotions filled with blood donation at the Government Girls Higher Secondary School, Barwa)

Bhiwani/Hisar (Dr. Satyawan Saurabh), April 9.

While society often remains silent on the birth of a daughter, a family in the village of Barwa redefined this thinking. A blood donation camp was organized, turning the birth of Arvi, daughter of Pawan Lakhera, not just a celebration but a festival of service—and this initiative gave a new voice to the sentiments. That day, the Government Girls High School campus became not just a place, but a platform filled with the heartbeat of humanity. Organized jointly by the National Social Organization Bhiwani branch and the Shivalik

Yuva Mandal, 36 units of blood were collected at this camp. It was as if each blood donor had come to ignite the flame of an unseen life by extracting a drop of life from within themselves. Guests at the event certificates and plants—as if service had been accompanied by nature's blessings. On this occasion, the sentiments of Mahendra Lakhera, a well-known social worker described this initiative as an inspiration for society. In their words, the event was not limited to blood donation, but also a message of respect for daughters, equality, and social awareness. Blood donors were honored with from Barwa, were particularly vocal. He said that the blood donation camp and Jalwa Pujan program organized to celebrate the birth of his granddaughter were successfully completed with everyone's support. He expressed his heartfelt gratitude to the National Social Organization Bhiwani, the youth team of Shivalik Yuva Mandal, respected MLA Randhir Singh, Municipal Chairman Mr. Rajesh Kedia, Mr. Ashok Lakhera, Sarpanch Chaudhariwas, the school staff, all the villagers, Gulshan Popli and Mr. Ranjeet. This event isn't just news, it's a message—that when joy touches the lives of others, it goes beyond celebration and becomes an inspiration. This initiative to donate blood upon the birth of a daughter reflects the changing face of society, where daughters are no longer just a responsibility, but a symbol of pride and compassion.

Oil prices rise again on the fragile Iran ceasefire

Hong Kong: Oil rose again to above USD97 a barrel and Asian stocks were trading lower Thursday, April 9, on skepticism over a fragile ceasefire between the US and Iran. Investors were closely watching whether a two-week ceasefire between the United States and Iran was already slipping after a round of deadly Israeli strikes on Lebanon that killed and injured hundreds. Iran again closed the Strait of Hormuz, in response to the attacks in Lebanon. Tokyo's Nikkei 225 dropped 0.9% to 55,824.30, while South Korea's Kospi lost 1.6% to 5,776.03. Hong Kong's Hang Seng fell 0.4% to 25,801.87. The Shanghai Composite index was down 0.7% to 3,965.70. Australia's S&P/ASX 200 edged down 0.1%, while Taiwan's Taiech was also 0.1% lower. US futures were down more than 0.1%. Oil prices were up Thursday, reversing an earlier plunge on optimism over the temporary ceasefire agreement. Brent crude, the international standard, was up 2.4% to USD97.02 per barrel. It previously fell briefly to below USD92 a barrel following the temporary ceasefire announcement.

Benchmark US crude was 3.3% higher on Thursday at USD97.50 a barrel. Uncertainties over global energy supply remained. The Strait of Hormuz, a chokepoint for energy transport where a fifth of the world's oil typically passes, was largely closed even though the US repeatedly demanded that the strait must be reopened. Talks to pursue a permanent end to the war could be taking place as soon as Friday in Pakistan, and US Vice President JD Vance is expected to be leading the negotiating team for the United States. Wall Street closed higher Wednesday following US President Donald Trump's announcement of a two-week ceasefire with Iran late Tuesday. The S&P 500 jumped 2.5% to 6,782.81. The Dow Jones Industrial Average rose 2.9% to 47,909.92. The Nasdaq composite was up 2.8% to 22,635.00. Following renewed hopes over deescalation of the war, shares of United Airlines surged 7.9% on Wednesday, American Airlines was up 5.6%, while cruise ship operator Carnival jumped 11.2%, trimming losses since the Iran war began on concerns over rising fuel costs. In other dealings, gold and silver prices fell. Gold's price dropped 0.7% to USD4,743.20 an ounce. The price of silver fell 1.6% to USD74.18 per ounce. The US dollar rose to 158.66 Japanese yen from 158.57 yen. The euro was trading at USD1.1668, up from USD1.1663. Iranian President Masoud Pezeshkian said Israel's continued strikes on Lebanon amount to a "flagrant violation" of the ceasefire and could undermine ongoing negotiations. In a post on X, he said the repeated attacks were a "dangerous indicator of deceit and lack of commitment" to potential agreements, warning that continued strikes would render diplomacy meaningless and that Iran would not abandon Lebanon. Latest updates here UAE reports no aerial threats as ceasefire takes effect ahead of talks The UAE Ministry of Defence confirmed that on April 9 the country's airspace remained free of any aerial threats, with no ballistic missiles, cruise missiles or drones originating from Iran detected in recent hours. The update comes after the United States and Iran agreed to a two-week ceasefire on April 8 and are expected to hold peace talks in Pakistan on April 11. Since the start of Iran's attacks, UAE air defences have intercepted 537 ballistic missiles, 26 cruise missiles and 2,256 drones. Authorities said 224 people have been injured and 13 killed. Iran nuclear chief rejects limits on enrichment Iran's atomic energy chief Mohammad Eslami said the country's uranium enrichment programme will not be curtailed, asserting that external pressure will not succeed in limiting it.

Project Glasswing: The cybersecurity arms race India cannot afford to ignore

Anthropic, the American artificial intelligence (AI) company behind the Claude assistant, has built an AI model so sharp at reading software code that it found security flaws hiding in major operating systems and web browsers for over two decades — flaws that the best human experts and automated tools had missed. The model is called Claude Mythos Preview, and Anthropic has no plans to release it to the public. Instead, it has pulled together Amazon, Apple, Google, Microsoft, NVIDIA, Cisco, CrowdStrike, JPMorganChase and others into a coalition called Project Glasswing to use Mythos defensively, hunting down and fixing vulnerabilities before attackers find them. Anthropic is backing this with USD 100 million in credits and USD 4 million in donations to open-source security bodies. What Mythos actually did Mythos found a 27-year-old bug in OpenBSD, an operating system considered unbreakable. It found a 16-year-old flaw in FFmpeg video software used by almost every streaming app on your phone in a line of code that automated scanners had tested 50 lakh times without catching. It chained together multiple Linux kernel flaws to show how an attacker could seize full control of a server. It did most of this without human guidance. Why this matters in India Every UPI transaction you make, every Aadhaar verification at a ration shop, every IRCTC tatkal booking, every medical record stored at a government hospital — all of it runs on layers of the same open-source software that Mythos is now scanning. Linux powers your Android phone and bank servers. A serious vulnerability in any of these systems is not some faraway American problem. It is our problem. Why Anthropic will not release this model The same capability that makes Mythos brilliant at defence makes it equally dangerous for attack. If freely available, ransomware gangs, state-backed hackers and freelance criminals would have a tool that finds exploitable flaws faster than any human. Cybercrime already costs the world an estimated USD 500 billion a year. Whether Anthropic's intentions are noble or not, the fact that this capability exists at all changes the game permanently. The real danger: When open-source catches up Mythos is locked away today. But AI capability spreads fast. Open-source models have been closing the gap with proprietary ones for years. When an open-source model reaches this level, anyone with a laptop will have it. Picture what that means for India. A coordinated attack on UPI could freeze digital payments for crores of people. An exploit targeting Jio or Airtel's network software could knock out communications across states.

Not wearing helmets can now lead to 3-month driving license ban

Hyderabad: Riders caught without a helmet in Hyderabad will face a three-month suspension of their driving licence under stricter traffic rules being implemented by the city traffic police to curb violations and improve road safety. The proposed penalties, part of a broader crackdown on traffic offences, include a fine of Rs 100 for the first helmet violation, while a second offence will attract a fine of Rs 1,000 along with suspension of the licence, officials said. According to a News 18 report, India records nearly 5 lakh road accidents annually, resulting in approximately 2 lakh deaths. Other proposed changes include higher penalties for over-speeding, with Rs 2,000 for the first offence and Rs 20,000 for the second. Jumping a traffic signal will invite Rs 500 for the first offence and Rs 5,000 for the second. Allowing a minor to drive will attract a fine of Rs 25,000 and three years in jail. Not giving way to an ambulance will cost Rs 1,000 for the first offence and Rs 10,000 for the second. Under digital enforcement measures, vehicles may be blacklisted if challans for offences committed over the past five years are not cleared within 45 days. Offenders' registration certificates (RC) and driving licences could also be frozen. Once frozen, the vehicle cannot be sold, insurance renewal will be blocked and driving with a cancelled licence will lead to seizure of the vehicle. Officials said vehicles may also be blocked in the online database if pending challans remain unpaid beyond the 45-day deadline. The digital enforcement methods will include black listing of vehicles if the challans of less than five years aren't paid in 45 days.

The unit will bring together local experts to work closely with Indian brands, sellers, and law enforcement agencies to dismantle counterfeit operations and safeguard intellectual property rights in the country's fast-growing e-commerce sector. "The unit will focus on proactively detecting and removing counterfeit listings, safeguarding intellectual property, and enabling coordinated enforcement action against bad actors, while deepening collaboration with industry bodies and government stakeholders. This effort is in line with Amazon's broader long-term commitment to India, including its plan to invest more than USD 35 billion across its businesses in the country through 2030," Amazon said in a statement.

Israel issues new warnings for Beirut as Iran says attacks breach ceasefire

Capitol Hill has been empty for days now, with lawmakers out of town on their "spring break". There's been bipartisan frustration, with politicians away from their desks at a time when the US is engaged in a war with Iran. That concern reached a peak on Monday when President Donald Trump threatened to end a "whole civilization". Democratic lawmakers were furious at the president and dozens called for the 25th Amendment to be invoked - a method to remove a president from office. The key check lawmakers have on the president in times of war is via the War Powers Act, which attempts to limit a president's ability to wage war. The measure, if approved by Congress, would stop military operations against Iran until the Trump administration could obtain congressional approval. Early in March, just after Trump announced that Israel and the US had invaded Iran, both the senate and the house voted on war powers resolutions. They both failed. Today, in a symbolic gesture, House Democrats will try once again to pass a war powers measure. They're trying to show Americans that they want to rein in the president. It will almost certainly fail. But it may give Americans who want the war to end a glimmer of hope. Israel's Defence Minister Israel Katz says his country's operation in Lebanon has dealt a "very strong blow to Hezbollah's face, leaving it stunned and confused by the depth of the penetration and the scope of the blow". The defence minister says the Israel Defense Forces is "prepared and ready to act forcefully if Iran fires at Israel". As a reminder, Iranian officials have said that the Israeli strikes on Lebanon are a violation of the ceasefire agreement - and the president has warned Iran's hands will "remain on the trigger". Katz says that over 200 people, who he describes as terrorists, were killed on Wednesday in Lebanon, bringing the total number of those killed during the operation to over 1,400. Earlier, Lebanon's health ministry said 203 people were killed in Israeli strikes on Wednesday and officials have said more than 1,700 people have been killed since Israel launched its latest campaign in Lebanon last month. Lebanon's Prime Minister Nawaf Salam has asked his Pakistani counterpart, Shehbaz Sharif, for his country's support in putting an end to Israeli strikes against Lebanon, according to a read-out of a phone call between the pair released by Pakistan's Prime Minister's Office. Pakistan acted as a mediator for the US-Iran ceasefire agreement. The readout reports that Sharif told Salam he "strongly condemned Israel's ongoing aggression". It says Salam "sought Pakistan's support for bringing an immediate end to the attacks targeting Lebanon and its people". The head of Iran's nuclear agency has ruled out any restrictions on uranium enrichment, a key demand of the United States, adding to concerns that the current ceasefire may not result in a peace deal. It's unclear who's making the big decisions in Iran - after its leadership was decimated - but a number of top officials have been making comments that put in question the foundations on which the talks due to take place with the US in Islamabad this weekend are based - at least according to Washington. Throughout the war, the US and Israel have insisted that their key aim was to end Iran's ability to build a nuclear weapon for good. The US Defence Secretary Pete Hegseth has said that Iran must either hand over its enriched uranium or the US will take it. The remarks by the head of Iran's nuclear agency clearly contradict this - a preview of just how difficult negotiations are likely to be. One view is that President Trump could make Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu accept Lebanon's inclusion in the Iran ceasefire deal.

Mexican army divers have rescued a miner from a flooded underground tunnel two weeks after he was first trapped. Francisco Zapata Nájera, 42, was stuck 300m (985ft) below ground after an embankment collapsed at the gold mine in the northern Mexican state of Sinaloa. Video of the rescue shows him standing in waist-deep water, telling his rescuers that he never lost faith during his ordeal. The search continues for another miner who is still missing. Twenty-five workers were inside the gold mine when the tailings dam - a structure which holds mining waste - burst on 25 March.

TRAPPED MINER RESCUED FROM FLOODED MEXICAN TUNNEL AFTER 14 DAYS

Twenty-one managed to get out, but four were trapped. José Alejandro Cástulo was rescued after five days under ground, and another miner died, but it took rescuers a full 13 days to locate Francisco Zapata. Following more than 300 hours of searching, divers finally spotted the blinking of the miner's torch light, which Zapata had turned on and off to alert them to his location. "How are you, how are you?" rescuers asked as they reached him. Once they had identified themselves as specialised military divers, they tell the miner that "your torch-light helped us a lot".

TRUMP CRITICISES NATO AS ALLIANCE CHIEF DESCRIBES MEETING AS 'VERY FRANK'

Donald Trump has again attacked Nato for not supporting the US in the Iran war, following a private meeting with its Secretary General Mark Rutte at the White House. In a post shared to Truth Social after the meeting, the US President said: "NATO WASN'T THERE WHEN WE NEEDED THEM, AND THEY WON'T BE THERE IF WE NEED THEM AGAIN." Meanwhile, Rutte has described his meeting to CNN with Trump as "very frank" and "very open", despite clear disagreements. Ahead of the talks on Wednesday, Trump had toyed with the idea of quitting the trans-Atlantic military alliance after several Nato countries resisted his calls to help reopen the Strait of Hormuz to ease rising global oil prices. The White House did not disclose details of the talk. The Secretary General was at the White House for over two hours on Wednesday, although it is unknown how long the meeting with Trump was. The meeting was expected to cajole and convince Trump that it's in his interest, and America's, to stay in the Nato alliance.

What is clear, however, is that Trump still has deep misgivings about the alliance and the member countries that he believes did not help the US enough before and during Operation Epic Fury. In recent weeks, Trump has threatened to withdraw from the 32-member transatlantic alliance. Asked about Nato's role in the ongoing conflict with Iran, White House Press Secretary Karoline Leavitt on Wednesday said in a direct quote from the president that Nato was "tested and they failed". Leavitt said Nato countries had "turned their backs on the American people," who fund their nations' defense, and that Trump would have a "very frank and candid conversation" with the Nato chief. Meanwhile, much of Rutte's message to Trump appears to be that many European countries did not stand in the way. The Secretary General told CNN that he pointed out that "the large majority of European nations has been helpful with basing, with logistics, with overflights". "It's therefore a nuanced picture," Rutte said.

BEST-SELLING THE HOUSEMAID AUTHOR FREIDA MCFADDEN REVEALS TRUE IDENTITY

One of the biggest mysteries in publishing has been solved, after the best-selling US author known to millions of readers as Freida McFadden revealed her true identity. McFadden has been one of the world's most popular authors of recent years, thanks to thrillers like The Housemaid. The author has never made a secret of the fact Freida McFadden is a pseudonym, and that she also works as a doctor, but had never revealed her real name. She has now told USA Today she is actually Sara Cohen. "I'm at a point in my career when I'm tired of this being a secret," she explained. "I'm tired of people debating if I'm a real person or if I'm three men. I am a real person and I have a real identity and I don't have anything to hide." Under the name McFadden, she was the second best-selling author of 2025 in the UK, selling 2.6 million books, and sold six million print copies in her home country. Those sales were fuelled by the success of The Housemaid, which was first published in 2022 and was turned into a film last year starring Sydney Sweeney and Amanda Seyfried.

Israeli strikes in Lebanon 'grave violation' of ceasefire, Iran minister tells

An Iranian minister has told the BBC that Israeli strikes in Lebanon on Wednesday constituted a "grave violation" of the US-Iran ceasefire agreement. Deputy Foreign Minister Saeed Khatibzadeh said Lebanon was covered by the two-week deal agreed on Tuesday - something the US and Israel dispute - and said the US must choose "between war and ceasefire". The Lebanese health ministry has said at least 203 people were killed on Wednesday in air strikes on what Israel called Hezbollah command centres and military sites. Pressed on whether Tehran would likewise ask Hezbollah to stop firing rockets towards Israel, Khatibzadeh claimed the Iranian-backed militant group had "abided" by the ceasefire. Hezbollah said on Thursday that it had fired at Israel overnight in response to what it called ceasefire violations. It has also threatened to keep up its attacks until "Israeli-American aggression" against Lebanon comes to an end. Speaking to BBC Radio 4's Today programme, Khatibzadeh said Tehran had sent a "crystal clear" message to the White House late on Wednesday which could be summarised as "you cannot have cake and eat it at the same time". "You cannot ask for a ceasefire and then accept terms and conditions, accept all the areas that a ceasefire is applied to, and name Lebanon, exactly Lebanon in that, and then your ally just starts a massacre." Pressed on whether this meant Iran would also ask Hezbollah to stop attacking Israel, Khatibzadeh responded that Hezbollah was a "Lebanese freedom movement" which he was "not shy to say" received "support" from Iran. He said the deal that was reached - "which Trump called a workable framework" - meant Iran, Washington and each of their allies were to adhere to the ceasefire, and claimed Hezbollah had "very much abided by that". The minister was also asked about Tehran's warning that ships passing through the Strait of Hormuz without its permission "would be targeted and destroyed" despite the ceasefire, during which ships are meant to be allowed through the vital waterway - and whether this could be considered an act of war.

BTS DELIGHTS FANS WITH FIRST SHOW IN $1BN WORLD TOUR

Tonight felt defined less by perfection and more by emotion. The early tension - anticipation over the comeback's success, worries about the weather, and the spotlight on the members' recent comments about pressure - gradually gave way to something lighter, warmer. Despite earlier concerns, RM appeared on stage without a cast, a reassuring sight for fans. While the rain may have limited the kind of powerful, tightly synchronised choreography that BTS are famous for, it didn't dampen the connection between the group and their audience. Throughout the show, all seven members repeatedly expressed how grateful they were - not just for the support, but for the chance to perform in front of fans again. That feeling was clearly mutual. As concertgoer Park Su-bin tells us: "The 360-degree stage was so refreshing and brilliant, and the staging tailored to it. It's a shame it rained, but I think it'll still be a special memory." Besides their chart-topping hits, BTS has achieved a longevity rarely seen in the K-pop world, where groups have come and gone, and where member exits are common. Many say close-knit chemistry is what's powering BTS - despite having taken time off for solo projects and mandatory military service, all seven of them are committed to staying together, often referring to one another as "family". In recent interviews, the band's members have shared their desire to continue performing together in their older years. "We're still here because we love each other so much. With fans and no reason to quit this precious brand and family, these people are my youth itself," leader RM told an Apple Music Radio programme a day after their latest album dropped.

ARGENTINA PASSES BILL LOOSENING PROTECTION OF ITS GLACIERS

Argentina's Congress has passed a controversial amendment making it easier to mine in glacier regions, a move environmentalists say weakens protections for crucial water sources. The pioneering Glacier Law, approved in 2010, prohibited all mining and exploration activities in glacier regions by protecting them as water reserves. The reform shifts the responsibility of defining protected glacier areas from the Argentine Institute for Snow, Ice and Environmental Sciences (Iainigla) to the provincial governments. President Javier Milei, who backed the reform, said the change

"empower[s] the provinces to utilise their resources" and allows mining activities "where there was nothing to protect". Argentina's Senate had already approved the bill in February 2026, so approval by the lower house was the last major hurdle left. Opponents of the reform argued that it would put a fundamental resource - water - at risk. "Without water, we can't even think about a growth and development project," Congresswoman Natalia de la Sota said. But a backer of the bill, Congresswoman Nancy Picón Martínez, said that the mining industry was being portrayed "as if it were a monster".

Tyson Fury Faces Bear-Wrestling Arslanbek Makhmudov In His Latest Comeback

Tyson Fury's latest comeback has revived the prospect of a long-awaited showdown with Anthony Joshua. First, though, the self-described "Gypsy King" needs to deal with a Russian-born heavyweight who wrestled a bear for fun. Arslanbek Makhmudov is Fury's opponent in their 12-round fight Saturday at Tottenham Hotspur Stadium. Fury, the former two-time heavyweight champion, came out of retirement for the fifth time because he wants to "punch men in the face and get paid for it." The 37-year-old Fury had called it quits shortly after losing to Oleksandr Usyk in December 2024 for a second time - his only two professional defeats. Usyk holds the WBC, WBA and IBF titles and at age 39 has indicated he only has a few fights left in him. The Ukrainian's next bout, though, has taken everyone by surprise - he's set to face kickboxing star Rico

Verhoeven in May at the Pyramids of Giza in Egypt. Also in May, WBO title holder Fabio Wardley faces Daniel Dubois in Manchester. Usyk told The Associated Press in a recent interview he foresees a trilogy bout with the charismatic Englishman: "In my head, Tyson Fury, it's the last dance." In their first meeting, Fury had lost his WBC title to Usyk via split decision in May 2024. The rematch was a unanimous decision for Usyk. Fury (34-2-1, 24 KOs), if he can take care of business Saturday, has his sights set on Joshua, telling DAZN: "That's the fight we're looking to make next." The 36-year-old Joshua had called out Fury after breaking Jake Paul's jaw in a stoppage victory in December. Days later, though, Joshua was involved in a fatal car crash in Nigeria. He was a passenger in the vehicle and two of his close friends were killed. Fury has said the tragedy is part of what motivated him to come out of retirement. Joshua appears set to resume fighting. Last weekend, he attended the Deontay

Wilder vs. Derek Chisora bout in London and had a brief exchange with Wilder after the American beat Chisora. The 36-year-old Makhmudov (21-2, 19 KOs) has created some buzz by posting a video that showed him wrestling a bear. He explained in a Feb. 21 social media post that "the goal was to overcome the threshold of fear and learn to control yourself in critical situations." Makhmudov hails from the Russian southern republic of Dagestan but lives in Canada. His most recent fight was a 12-round unanimous decision over Dave Allen in October. Makhmudov's left eye was swollen shut in a loss to Guido Vianello in 2024. He was felled by Agit Kabayel's body shots in a fourth-round stoppage in 2023. Conor Benn (24-1, 14 KOs) returns to Tottenham after two middleweight slugfests there against Chris Eubank Jr. in 2025.

Babar Azam, Marnus Labuschagne's 'Peace Gesture' During PSL Brutally Trolled By Internet

A "peace gesture" was made before the start of a Pakistan Super League (PSL) 2026 game between Peshawar Zalmi and Hyderabad Kingsmen on Wednesday, as team captains Babar Azam and Marnus Labuschagne, along with PSL CEO Salman Naseer, released a white dove during the toss. The act came in the aftermath of the two-week ceasefire between the United States and Iran concerning geopolitical tension in the Gulf region. However, the PSL's "peace gesture" received criticism from several users on social media. Meanwhile, Babar Azam found himself at the centre of a heated moment off the field after dismissing comparisons with Virat Kohli during a post-match press conference in the Pakistan Super League 2026. The Peshawar Zalmi skipper, who guided his side to a tense last-ball victory over the Hyderabad Kingsmen, appeared visibly displeased when questioned about his ability to finish games in comparison to Kohli. While Babar contributed a measured 43 off 37 balls in the chase of 146, he was not at the crease at the end, prompting the query. Responding in a seemingly frustrated manner, Babar brushed aside the suggestion and urged the journalist to move on from such debates. "Finish these things. Keep these things to yourself. End the comparison and move on. It's your misconception that I have not finished matches," he said. The exchange quickly gained traction, once again highlighting the scrutiny surrounding cross-border comparisons between leading cricketers. Widely regarded as Pakistan's premier batter, Babar has often been praised for his consistency, though his approach in T20 cricket has drawn criticism, particularly around strike rate and finishing ability.

Bangladesh Cricketers 'Highly Underpaid', New BCB Head Tamim Iqbal 'Reportedly Shocked'

There has been a big change in Bangladesh cricket since the change in government. Former Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) chief Aminul Islam Bulbul has been removed, while former captain Tamim Iqbal is now leading the organisation. Reflecting on the decision to substantially increase domestic match fees and the salaries of men's and women's cricketers, Tamim said players had long been "highly underpaid" and warranted better financial acknowledgment. This decision marks the first move by the Tamim-led ad hoc committee, which began its work earlier this week, providing much-needed relief to Bangladesh's domestic cricketers, especially those in the women's league. Although there was a hike, Tamim recognised that the updated figures represent only progress in the right direction. "This may not be ideal, but it is certainly an improvement, considering there are limits to how much can be increased at once," he told ESPNCricinfo. Tamim was reportedly shocked, according to the ESPNCricinfo story, to learn that women cricketers earned as little as BDT 1,000 per match in domestic one-day competitions, a figure that has increased only slightly in recent years. As per the BCB's new salary structure, match fees have been raised across different formats, with women players now earning BDT 10,000 for T20 matches, BDT 15,000 for 50-over games, and BDT 20,000 for first-class fixtures. Additionally, the monthly retainers for the top 36 women cricketers have been raised from BDT 30,000 to BDT 40,000, highlighting a wider effort to enhance financial stability within the system. The overhaul extends beyond women's cricket. Male domestic players have also received a salary increase, with Category A players now earning BDT 65,000 per month, while those in Categories B and C will receive BDT 50,000 and BDT 40,000 respectively. 'Dead Ball' Rule Row Strikes IPL After Delhi Capitals' 1-Run Defeat vs Gujarat Titans. Internet Reacts

Gujarat Titans pulled off a thrilling one-run win over Delhi Capitals with Kuldeep Yadav getting run-out on the final ball of the IPL 2026 encounter on Wednesday. With 2 runs needed off 2 balls, David Miller refused to take a single in order to stay on strike and that decision backfired massively as his team fell short of the target by the smallest of margins. However, there was another decision in the match that has the social media buzzing. In the 10th over of the DC innings, Nitish Rana was struck on the pads by a delivery from Rashid Khan and while the batters completed a single, the umpire raised his finger. DC went for the review and although the decision was eventually overturned by the third umpire, the ball was deemed dead and the run did not count. At 9.2 overs, Nitish Rana completed a single, but the run wasn't counted because the umpire had initially given him out, even though DRS later overturned the decision in his favour. DC eventually lost the game by 1 run@ashwinravi99 what do you think of this rule, April 9, 2026 This has been one of the contentious rules in modern cricket as MCC Law 20.1.1.3 states that "a ball is considered dead after a batter is dismissed. The ball will be deemed to be dead from the instant of the incident causing the dismissal". Nitish Rana was given lbw but DRS showed there was a contact, they had taken a single but as umpire had given it as out the run was nullified and it became a dot ball. That foolish rule need to go out, it costed Delhi the match Law 20.6 doubles on the concept and makes it clear that the ball will remain dead even if the original decision is revoked - "Once the ball is dead, no revoking of any decision can bring the ball back into play for that delivery".

SEVEN GAMES TO GO - HOW WILL DE ZERBI TRY TO SAVE SPURS?

Clubs at risk of relegation tend to hire pragmatic coaches. But that is not how you would describe new Tottenham boss Roberto de Zerbi. The Italian is known for his attacking style of possession-based football, and has stayed true to his footballing ideas throughout his managerial career. Three years after starting in management in Italy's fourth division, De Zerbi was in charge of Serie A side Palermo, where he struggled to showcase his initial potential. When he was sacked, newly promoted Benevento hired him, but relegation followed. Despite that, De Zerbi's reputation was boosted - and he has enjoyed much success since. The 46-year-old's quality is clear but his system relies on smart and technical players more than most tactical plans. So what tactics will De Zerbi implement at Spurs, and will this relegation-threatened group of players be able to execute them? Looking at De Zerbi's Brighton and Marseille sides, you soon notice how often they repeat certain patterns of play. When building up, the idea is to draw opponents towards defenders on the ball before using quick passing routines to find free players facing forward. They are better positioned to play the ball up the pitch quickly into the attackers. When it works, De Zerbi's sides turn possession in their own half into shots near the opposition's goal within a few seconds. It's an electrifying watch - but the level of potential attacking reward comes with great risk. De Zerbi's approach requires defensive players to take responsibility with the ball - delaying actions until they have forced opponents to press them. In a recent training clip., external he was seen coaching his new players through concepts to make his tactics easier to implement. For central defenders under no pressure, the advice was to take many touches.

Strategic Shift In Dhaka: Bangladesh Makes Fresh Attempt To Repair Cricketing Relations With India

The appointment of former Bangladesh captain Tamim Iqbal as the interim president of an 11-member ad-hoc committee has offered the board fresh hope of reviving relations with India. Under his leadership, the board has formalised its interest in touring India while simultaneously inviting the BCCI to Bangladesh for a bilateral series later this year. This move carries significant weight, as India is already scheduled to visit Bangladesh under the current World Test Championship cycle. The development appears to be a clear diplomatic effort by the new administration in Dhaka to mend fences and move beyond recent friction between the two nations. Cricketing relationship between the two countries hit an all-time low after Bangladesh pulled out of the T20 World Cup 2026 over 'security concerns' in India. Bangladesh were replaced by Scotland in the tournament after ICC refused to entertain the former's 'venue change' request. The BCB ad-hoc committee has also been tasked with conducting fresh elections within the next 90 days, marking a transition phase in Bangladesh's cricket administration following the removal of chairman Aminul Islam Bulbul. Aminul Islam Bulbul Appeals to the ICC The ousted Bulbul has written to the International Cricket Council (ICC) seeking intervention after being removed by the National Sports Council. However, the plea is unlikely to gain much traction.

YUVRAJ SINGH OPENS UP ABOUT HIS CANCER DIAGNOSIS

One of the biggest match-winners in Indian cricket, Yuvraj Singh's story is one that would inspire several generations of cricketers. From winning Player of the Series awards in the 2007 T20 World Cup and the 2011 ODI World Cup to making a return after battling cancer, Yuvraj's life is a true cricketing hero's memoir. The man who beat cancer and made a comeback to the Indian team opened up on his battle with the deadly disease, revealing that he was told he had only three to six months left to live. Yuvraj was battling cancer during the 2011 World Cup, but he chose to fight the pain and doubt to deliver some of the finest performances of his career. After the World Cup ended, however, the former all-rounder realised how much his health had deteriorated. "It was hard to accept. At the peak of your career, you're on top of a mountain and then you fall into a ditch. I was in Delhi. We were going on tour to the West Indies and England. Ganguly had retired and my Test spot had just opened. I was waiting seven years for that spot. I said, 'I don't care if I die, I need that spot.' But I got sicker and sicker. "Dr Nitesh Rohatgi said to me, 'The tumour is sitting between your heart and lung. Either you go and play cricket or you might have a heart attack. You've got three to six months left to live if you don't do chemotherapy.' That's when I realised I needed to think," Yuvraj said during a chat with Michael Vaughan on The Overlap Cricket. This is when Yuvraj moved to the USA for treatment and was told that he might never get to play cricket again. But the winner's mentality in him didn't let him lose hope. "I went to the US to see Dr Einhorn, who treated Lance Armstrong. It took a whole year to come to terms with the fact that I might never play again. Mentally, it was harder. I needed something to motivate myself. If I don't play cricket, who am I? I'm no one. That's what I believed," he said. Yuvraj added that he kept watching cricket videos while undergoing treatment. During this period, the likes of Anil Kumble and Sachin Tendulkar paid him a visit to see him. Kumble even advised him to take rest and not put strain on his mind by watching videos.

Sania Mirza Academy Serves Big: Elite High-Performance Programme Launched With Portugese Coach

The Indian tennis ace has announced a landmark collaboration with internationally renowned coach Marco Seruca to launch a High Performance Tennis Programme starting May 1. It is an initiative aimed at reshaping India's tennis pipeline with global standards. This is a structured system designed to produce elite competitors. The impact will be on technique, fitness, game awareness and mental conditioning. It promises a 360-degree approach to the sport of tennis. Sania's partner in the project, Seruca, is a former Portuguese Davis

Cup player with over 35 years of coaching experience. He steps in as the Head Coach. His resume spans continents, including his stint as Technical Director at the Chandigarh Lawn Tennis Association and a founder of the MS Star Academy. Seruca talks about his reason for joining hands with Sania, "India has extraordinary raw talent. What has been missing is a structured, high-performance environment to channel it," Seruca said. "The Sania Mirza Tennis Academy provides exactly the right platform to do that." For Mirza-a six-time

Grand Slam champion and former World No.1 in Doubles, this move is a natural extension of her long-term vision. Since stepping away from professional tennis, she has focused on building pathways for the next generation. Mirza says, "Bringing Marco Seruca to Hyderabad gives Indian players access to the standard of coaching they deserve." The programme will operate six days a week, blending high-intensity on-court sessions with professional fitness regimes and competitive match play. Each player will receive individualized development plans, regular performance tracking, and guidance on tournament pathways-mirroring systems seen in top global academies. Hyderabad, already a proven sporting hub, now adds another layer to its high-performance ecosystem. Notably, Olympic medalist Gagan Narang has built a similar pathway in shooting through his elite "Gun For Glory" academies, across 11 states and 15 academies. Mirza becomes the second Hyderabad sporting icon to invest deeply in structured, world-class training infrastructure-signalling a broader shift from individual excellence to institutional legacy.

Meanwhile, in her recent pictures, Shivathmika exudes a classic and elegant charm, wearing a vibrant mustard-yellow saree adorned with delicate silver embroidery and a scalloped border.

Sreeleela Should Reset Before the Next Big Leap?

Sreeleela made a striking debut in Tollywood with the 2021 romantic drama, Pelli Sandadi. Later, she scored a super hit with Dhamaka and soon became an A-list actress in the South. However, none of her films since 2022, barring Bhagavanth Kesari, have become successful at the box office. Despite scoring consecutive flops, Sreeleela has been grabbing some big offers.

According to the latest buzz, the young actress will play the female lead in Ajith Kumar's upcoming film with Adhik Ravichandran. However, people feel that instead of signing films on a trot, it is time for the actress to take a breath and reset her career.

As per reports in the Tamil media, Ajith will start shooting for his next film, AK 64, in May. Sreeleela will be seen alongside him for the first time in this movie.

Anirudh Ravichander is composing the music for this film. AK 64 will be Sreeleela's second film in Tamil, after Parasakthi. This year, she already faced two consecutive flops in the form of Parasakthi and Ustaad Bhagat Singh. Both are big films featuring star heroes. Still, due to the disappointing story and screenplay, they ended up as flops.

Despite scoring such big flops, Sreeleela is jumping onto other films without taking a pause. People on social media opined that though she has good charm and dances well, she needs to concentrate more on her strengthening her acting skills. Thus, they felt it would be better if she takes a pause, instead of signing new films on a streak. Off screen, her journey has been equally remarkable. Amid a packed acting schedule, Sreeleela recently achieved a significant personal milestone by earning her MBBS degree, reflecting a discipline that extends far beyond cinema.
