India rejects Canada report alleging foreign interference claims

New Delhi, May 7: The Ministry of External Affairs (MEA) on Thursday firmly dismissed recent allegations made by the Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS), which suggested India's involvement in foreign interference activities in Canada, calling the claims "baseless imputations." Addressing the weekly media briefing, MEA spokesperson Randhir Jaiswal reiterated that India categorically rejects such assertions and maintains a consistent position on the matter. He stated that India is a democratic nation committed to international norms and respects the sovereignty of all countries. He further emphasized that it is not India's policy to interfere in the internal affairs of other nations, adding that concerns of this nature should be addressed through established diplomatic and institutional channels rather than through public commentary or politicised narratives. But the conditions.

TVK hits 120 seats; Vijay submits support letters, swearing-in today at 11 am

► Vijay meets Governor Arlekar for 3rd time in three days, stakes claim to form govt; swearing-in as Chief Minister to be held today at 11 am

► The IUMI had also extended support to the TVK with its two seats, says Thanthi TV

Chennai (TSIT)

TVK chief Vijay, buoyed by the support from the Left parties, on Friday called on Governor Rajendra Vishwanath Arlekar at the Lok Bhavan in Chennai in connection with securing an invite from him to form the government. Vijay, who has already staked a claim to form the government, appears to have had a brief meeting with the Governor, sources said. Hours after the Left parties pledged unconditional support, Vijay reached the office of the governor in Guindy and TVK supporters expect that Arlekar would extend an invitation to form the government.

Vijay-led Tamilaga Vettri Kazhagam, with 108 seats but 10 short of a majority initially, had earlier reached out to CPI, CPI (M) and the VCK—all DMK allies, seeking their support to form a government after winning its maiden Assembly election in Tamil Nadu, which was held on April 23. All three have two MLAs each in the 234-member House. The CPI and CPI

(M) have extended support to Vijay, while VCK will announce its decision on Saturday.

Vijay later visited the CPI state headquarters to thank the leaders for their support. In the April polls, TVK won 108 seats and emerged as the single largest party. TVK founder Vijay will have to resign from one of the two constituencies he has won, as per EC norms. The Congress party has extended the support of its five MLAs to Vijay. As per the calculations, the strength of TVK and its supporting MLAs now stands at 116, including the requirement of Vijay resigning from one of the two seats he contested from—Perambur in Chennai and Tiruchirappalli East.

Earlier in the day, in a major boost to its efforts to form a government in Tamil Nadu, Vijay-led TVK received the support of the two Left parties on Friday, bringing it closer to the magic number of 118 legislators required for a simple majority.

The Left parties, both part of the DMK-led alliance in Tamil Nadu, said that the decision was taken in order to prevent the BJP's "backdoor entry" into the state. They will remain with the DMK vis-à-vis state rights. The Communist parties announced that they will not be a part of the TVK cabinet. While the CPI initially informed the Tamil Nadu Governor of their decision to support TVK, CPI (M) followed suit shortly, bringing Vijay closer to the simple majority mark. Both parties addressed letters to the governor informing him of their support for the TVK.

Addressing a joint press conference, CPI (M) State Secretary P Shanmugam and CPI State Secretary M Veerapandian declared unconditional support for the TVK. Shanmugam said the decision to support TVK was to prevent the BJP's "backdoor entry" into Tamil Nadu. It was to prevent its bid to rule the state through the Governor, though it has lost polls. "If no government is formed within 10 days, it may lead to imposition of governor's rule. As regards protection of the state's rights, the Left parties will continue to align with the DMK," Shanmugam said.

Kodungal to emerge as education, industrial hub: CM Revanth

Hyderabad TSIT Bureau:

Chief Minister A. Revanth Reddy on Friday said Kodungal would soon emerge as a major hub for education and industries in Telangana, adding that the State government was committed to transforming the constituency into a model region for the entire country. Addressing a massive public meeting after laying foundation stones for the development of the Sri Venkateswara Swamy Temple and several infrastructure projects, the Chief Minister said he was working nearly 18 hours a day for the development of Telangana and the welfare of its people. Revanth Reddy stated that Telangana was progressing with the support of all sections of society and that the government aimed to make the State one of the top performers in development and welfare. Highlighting the rapid transformation taking place in Kodungal, he announced that major educational institutions, including a Medical College, Engineering College, Advanced Technology Centre (ATC), Nursing College, Polytechnic College and Sainik School, were being established in the constituency. He said the educational infrastructure would be completed within one-and-a-half years, attracting students from across Telangana. The Chief Minister also announced the establishment of a massive industrial park across 2,300 acres at Lagacharla, where several leading national industries are expected to set up units. He added that improved road connectivity between Hyderabad Airport and Kodungal was also being planned. Revanth Reddy informed that nearly 90 per cent of the Vikarabad railway line works had been completed and that a cement factory would begin operations within six months, creating employment opportunities for local youth. On irrigation, the Chief Minister directed officials to complete the Narayanpet-Kodungal Lift Irrigation Scheme within 18 months to bring Krishna river water to the region. He assured full government support, including funds and speedy land acquisition, for timely completion of the project. The Chief Minister also highlighted welfare initiatives such as farm loan waivers, Rythu Bharosa, Indiramma housing, ration cards, fine rice distribution and fee reimbursement schemes.

Former Mamata aide Suvendu Adhikari to be Bengal CM, elected BJP legislature party leader

New Delhi (TSIT)

Suvendu Adhikari, once a close aide of Trinamool Congress chief Mamata Banerjee, is set to take her place in the West Bengal Chief Minister Office.

Adhikari was today elected leader of the BJP legislature party in Kolkata in the presence of Union Home Minister Amit Shah who was party's central observer for the task. Shah promised Sonar Bangla after Adhikari was elected and said Bengal had placed tremendous responsibility on the shoulders of the BJP, which must not falter.

Adhikari will take oath as CM at a ceremony to be held at Brigade Parade Ground tomorrow. Prime Minister Narendra Modi and all top BJP and NDA leaders will attend the oath-taking of the first-ever BJP government in West Bengal.

Adhikari sealed his claim on the top job after defeating Mamata twice — from Nandigram in 2021 and again Bhabanipur this time. Speaking today in Kolkata, Shah said, "On behalf of the party, I also want to say that the expectations the people of Bengal have placed on us, and the mandate they have given with hope and trust, we will make every effort to ensure that their faith is not broken in any way."

Congress demands Kargil-style review as questions persist over Operation Sindoor

New Delhi (TSIT)

The Congress on Thursday renewed its demand for greater accountability and strategic review over the events surrounding Operation Sindoor, with senior leader Jairam Ramesh asserting that several key questions linked to the military operation and its diplomatic aftermath remain unresolved even a year after its launch.

In a detailed statement issued on the first anniversary of the operation, Ramesh said the nation must salute the courage and achievements of India's armed forces while also examining developments that followed the conflict. "As we celebrate the first anniversary of the launch of Operation Sindoor and salute the achievements of our armed forces, it would be useful to recall" a number of subsequent events, he said. The Congress leader raised concerns over the circumstances in which the ceasefire was announced, noting that the "first announcement of the cease fire that halted Operation Sindoor unexpectedly" came on May 10, 2025, from US Secretary of State Marco Rubio.

Kavitha warns congress over Palamuru-Rangareddy project

Hyderabad TSIT:

K. Kavitha on Friday criticised both the Congress government and the previous BRS regime over delays in the Palamuru-Rangareddy Lift Irrigation Project, alleging that Telangana was still facing injustice in Krishna river water allocation. Addressing the Palamuru-Rangareddy Project Sadhana Sabha at Chowdargudem near Shadnagar, Kavitha said despite spending nearly Rs.33,000 crore on the project, water had not reached even 33 acres. She accused the previous BRS government of changing the project source point from Jurala to Srisailem, leading to disputes with Andhra Pradesh and incomplete canal systems. Targeting Chief Minister A. Revanth Reddy, she alleged that the Congress government had failed to take up basic works despite winning 12 seats in Palamuru. Kavitha warned that Telangana Rakshana Sena would launch a padayatra if works at Lakshmidhevipalli were not started by Dasara and demanded national status for the project.

CM Revanth flags off Haj pilgrims, announces minority welfare initiatives

Hyderabad TSIT Bureau:

Chief Minister A. Revanth Reddy on Friday reaffirmed the Telangana Government's commitment to minority welfare, skill development and inclusive growth while flagging off buses carrying Haj pilgrims in Hyderabad.

Addressing the gathering, the Chief Minister said minorities were being given priority in welfare schemes, education and employment opportunities. Recalling last year's Haj bus accident in which 44 pilgrims from Telangana lost their lives, he said the State Government had provided Rs.5 lakh compensation to each affected family.

Revanth Reddy said the government was providing scholarships for minority students pursuing higher and overseas education and upgrading ITIs into Advanced Technology Centres (ATCs) to prepare youth for global employment opportunities, especially in countries like Germany and Japan.

The Chief Minister also announced free retrofitting of autos operating within Hyderabad's Outer Ring Road limits into electric vehicles to reduce fuel expenses and improve the livelihoods of auto drivers. Later, during a review meeting on Minority Welfare at the Secretariat, he directed officials to establish special degree colleges for minority students with a focus on skill development and Artificial Intelligence training. He also instructed officials to ensure timely payment of honorariums to Imams and Mouzams and proposed developing cultural and religious structures under the Musi Riverfront project to reflect Telangana's "Ganga-

CM Naidu announces Praja Darbar-style grievance platform

Vijayawada (TSIT):

Andhra Pradesh Chief Minister N Chandrababu Naidu has announced that a dedicated platform similar to Praja Darbar will soon be introduced to strengthen the Public Grievance Redressal System (PGRS).

He directed the officials to ensure that public grievances were resolved immediately with accountability and compassion to win the confidence of the people. Public representatives and officials must jointly work towards resolving grievances. Drawing inspiration from Singapore's grievance redressal model, he emphasized the need for faster and more localised problem-solving, including at the mandal level.

Speaking on the second day of the seventh District Collectors' conference at Secretariat on Friday, the Chief Minister reviewed key areas, including file clearance systems, public grievance redressal, data integration, AWARE, and WhatsApp Governance.

He expressed concern over the delay in redressal of public grievances and warned the officials against negligence in grievance redressal. The Chief Minister appreciated the significant improvement in e-file clearance time-lines across the state, noting that average clearance time has reduced from nearly 10 days to about 2 days over the last three months.

Naidu congratulated Ministers, Chief Secretary Sai Prasad, Collectors, SPs, and Secretaries for accelerating administrative processes, with some files being disposed of within hours despite heavy workloads, and directed them to further increase the speed of file disposal and move towards a near-complete digital governance system with minimal manual files.

Google explores AI infrastructure, server and drone manufacturing investments In India: Ashwini

New Delhi, May 8 : Alphabet-owned Google is exploring fresh investments in India focused on artificial intelligence (AI) infrastructure and the local manufacturing of servers and drones, Union Minister Ashwini Vaishnaw said on Friday.

Sharing details of his meeting with Google executives on social media platform X, Vaishnaw said the company is evaluating opportunities across AI infrastructure development as well as electronics manufacturing in India.

“Google is exploring investments in India across AI infrastructure and the manufacturing of servers and drones,” he said.

The development comes amid increasing global investments in AI capabilities and data centre expansion.

The minister’s remarks also come shortly after Google CEO Sundar Pichai announced that the company would raise its total capital expenditure to $185 billion this year, largely driven by aggressive investments in AI infrastructure.

Speaking at the Google Cloud Next 2026 summit last month, Pichai said more than half of Google’s machine learning computing resources would now be allocated to its cloud business.

Google has already unveiled a massive $15 billion investment plan in Andhra Pradesh to build what it described as a ‘gigawatt-scale AI ecosystem’ in Visakhapatnam.

As part of the initiative, the company in April began work on its India AI Hub project in partnership with AdaniConneX and Nxta by Airtel.

Google had termed the project its “largest investment in India’s digital future to date.” The initiative includes India’s first gigawatt-scale AI hub spread across three data centre campuses and will also feature a 1 GW hyperscale AI data centre. The Andhra Pradesh government has allocated nearly 600 acres of land in Turluvada, Rambilli and Adavivaram for the ambitious AI infrastructure project. Speaking at the groundbreaking ceremony on April 28, Vaishnaw had said India is well positioned to become a trusted global partner in electronics manufacturing and supply chains, supported by strong policy initiatives and expanding technological capabilities. The minister also urged global technology companies, including Google, to scale up local production of servers, graphics processing units (GPUs) and semiconductor chips in India, underlining the government’s push to strengthen domestic electronics manufacturing.

Intel flags ISI bid to exploit West Bengal’s political volatility through fake narratives

New Delhi, May 8 : Indian intelligence agencies have flagged attempts by Pakistan’s Inter-Services Intelligence (ISI) to exploit the prevailing political volatility in West Bengal by running coordinated disinformation campaigns, officials said.

The alert comes amid heightened tensions in the state following the killing of Chandranath Rath, a close aide of BJP leader Suwendu Adhikari. The situation remains sensitive in the aftermath of a bitterly contested Assembly election between the BJP and the Trinamool Congress, which the BJP won decisively. Intelligence agencies continue to monitor the situation closely. The chatter they picked up suggests that ISI-backed elements within the state and across the border would seek to exploit the situation. These elements thrive in such situations and seek to add fire so that the entire state remains volatile.

An Intelligence Bureau official said that West Bengal and the northeastern states have always been on the ISI playbook. While illegal immigration is one weapon that the ISI uses to create demographic changes and incite communal disharmony, it has also got a brigade that seeks to take advantage of a politically volatile situation. The official added that while some of the incidents of violence are politically motivated, many are fuelled by external elements. The ISI is looking to run a disinformation campaign in West Bengal so that the state remains on the boil. Political violence that even includes bomb hurling is nothing new in West Bengal. This is something that the ISI-backed elements would look to cash in on. Another official said that the disinformation campaign would largely focus on fake news relating to the decisions that the new government would take.

So, what can be done, and what role do different actors play? The good news is that many households can implement some adaptation measures on their own, particularly for heat. If made affordable, solutions like passive cooling (shade, natural ventilation, and so forth), reflective roofs, fans, or air conditioners can offer meaningful protection in many cases. But governments also have an important role to play, especially in lower-income areas and communities. They can finance critical infrastructure like coastal protection, and establish cooling shelters to protect the public. They can also create incentives to adapt, by setting and enforcing standards that enhance resilience, while raising awareness of risks. And they can deploy targeted subsidies or procurement programmes to make adapta-

Suvendu Adhikari: The Man Who Waited For 15 Years - And Won

The year was 1993. On July 21, in the heart of Kolkata, police opened fire on a crowd of demonstrators. Thirteen people were killed. The march had been led by Mamata Banerjee, then a Young Congress leader, towards the Writers' Building as part of the "Writers' Chalo" movement. The incident shook Bengal politics to its core and would go on to become one of the most enduring emotional symbols of Mamata Banerjee's political movement. Since then, every year, Mamata has observed July 21 as Shahid Dibas - Martyrs' Day. Even after the formation of the Trinamool Congress, the event continued to grow in scale and significance. Over the years, it became one of the biggest annual political gatherings in Bengal.

18 Years Later

The story of Suvendu Adhikari - one of Bengal's most consequential political figures of recent times - begins 18 years later, in 2011. That year, a huge event was organised at Brigade Parade Ground and Dharmatala under Mamata Banerjee's leadership. The crowd was enormous. The atmosphere was charged. By then, Mamata had already emerged as the undisputed force against the Left Front government, and the momentum for change in Bengal was building to a fever pitch. Suvendu Adhikari was, at that time, the Youth Trinamool Congress president - an important organisational figure who had played a major role in strengthening the party at the grassroots level, especially in East Midnapore and adjoining regions. He was on stage that day. But something felt wrong. The event management, stage announcements, and overall coordination were almost entirely in the hands of Kunal Ghosh, who was then extraordinarily prominent within the party and closely aligned with Mamata Banerjee. Kunal was making the announcements, directing the flow of the event, energising the crowd, and effectively conducting the entire gathering. Suvendu, despite his organisational stature, remained largely silent and inactive on stage - present, but peripheral. To many observers, it appeared as though he had been placed there simply to be seen, not heard.

The First Slight

For someone as politically ambitious and organisationally driven as Suvendu Adhikari, that was not a trivial insult. Outwardly, nothing happened. But the first seeds of distance had been planted. Suvendu reportedly felt that Kunal Ghosh had displaced him in the leadership hierarchy, and that Mamata Banerjee herself had quietly approved this arrangement. From that moment, a slow-burning sense of wounded pride began to take root. The answer to why he felt so isolated - despite being surrounded by Mamata, the party leadership, and the very movement he had helped build - lies partly in the nature of Mamata Banerjee's politics itself. Mamata had emerged from street movements, agitation politics, and direct mass mobilisation. She valued absolute loyalty and exercised tight central control over the movement's emotional narrative. In such a political universe, space around the leader is carefully rationed. Younger leaders with strong independent mass bases inevitably began competing - consciously or unconsciously - for visibility and influence. Suvendu was among such young leaders then. But, stubborn and self-respecting, he was also not the type to let things go. That incident at Brigade and Dharmatala stayed with him. Soon came another blow. Rajib Banerjee had reportedly been assured the post of Youth Trinamool Congress president, and was even asked to postpone a planned trip to Australia in anticipation. But at the last minute, Soumitra Khan was brought in instead, and Suvendu was effectively edged out of that organisational space entirely. For Suvendu, this was yet another betrayal.

The Mukul Roy Era

Around the same period, Mukul Roy's star was rapidly rising as one of the most powerful figures inside the Trinamool Congress. He and his son, Subhranshu Roy, grew increasingly influential in youth and organisational politics. In fact, people would openly say that though Mamata Banerjee was the Chief Ministerial face, Mukul Roy was the TMC's organisational backbone. Abhishek Banerjee had not yet emerged as a dominant force in the party in those days. Yet, he was slowly rising through the youth leadership structure. Inside the party, a quiet but unmistakable conversation had begun taking shape about who would eventually emerge as Mamata Banerjee's political heir, Roy or Banerjee. A silent power struggle was already on its way. Suvendu, watching all of this patiently, began to understand his own position more clearly. The number-two role he had perhaps aspired to get, was already slipping away from him. Roy or Banerjee, Adhikari found himself slowly sidelined - close to Mamata, and yet far from power. Eventually, though, Mukul Roy left for the Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP). That would further clear the way for Abhishek Banerjee. The trajectory was becoming clear. And its implication wasn't lost on Suvendu. As these developments unfolded, Suvendu slowly began to reckon with the possibility that he, too, might eventually have to leave the Trinamool. BJP leaders had already begun establishing contact with him. But it wasn't that straightforward. His father, Sisir Adhikari, an old Congressman and seasoned politician, was firmly opposed to the idea. Mamata Banerjee herself reportedly made repeated efforts to stop Suvendu from leaving. She even sought Sisir Adhikari's help to bridge the growing distance. Sisir tried to defuse the tensions. But by then, the real conflict perhaps was no longer between Suvendu and Mamata directly - it was Abhishek Banerjee's growing influence over the party machinery that didn't sit right with Suvendu.

Suvendu Was No Mukul Roy

Mukul Roy's drift towards the BJP had been driven by some sticky factors. For one, he faced multiple allegations as a Rajya Sabha MP. By the time he had made the move, his significance within the Trinamool was also fading. His flight to the BJP, thus, was only natural. Suvendu's case was different - and the BJP knew it. He was seen not merely as another defector but as a potential alternative for anti-Mamata politics in Bengal.

Education increased... but why did skills not increase?

PRIYANKA SAURABH

Today's society is experiencing a strange paradox. On the one hand, the level of education seems higher than ever—children in every household are studying, attending coaching classes, online classes, and preparing for competitive exams, and as a result, their grades are steadily improving. But on the other hand, a question constantly arises—are we truly learning, or are we just collecting marks? This irony isn't limited to the individual level, but rather questions the direction of the entire education system. From school to college, children are drawn into a race where the goal is simply to score good marks, achieve high rankings, and accumulate as many certificates as possible. In this process, "learning" is left behind. Children begin to believe that success means writing correct answers on exams, not applying that knowledge to life. This is why today we see young people who are highly successful on paper, but struggle with real-life challenges. They can solve complex problems, but stumble over practical solutions to simple ones. Lack of confidence, hesitation in decision-making, and a lack of ability to adapt to new situations—all these are the results of an education that relies more on "memorization" and less on "understanding." Our education system has long relied on a culture of rote learning. Children are taught what questions will be asked and how to write their answers. In this process, their curiosity gradually fades. They become reluctant to ask questions, fearing they might be proven "wrong." Creativity and independent thinking, essential for the development of any society, are stifled under this pressure. When these same children complete higher education and enter the working world, reality sets in. Companies don't just want degrees, but skills—the ability to understand problems, work in teams, communicate, and adapt to changing circumstances. But the education system hasn't prepared them for these. This is why, despite increasing degrees, young people lag behind in taking advantage of employment opportunities. This isn't just a crisis of unemployment, but a "skills gap." Another serious aspect of this process is mental pressure. Today's students are burdened with immense expectations. Family, society, and competition all exert constant pressure on them to perform well at all costs.

But when the purpose of their studies is unclear, this pressure gradually turns into stress and confusion. Children are unable to understand how what they are studying is relevant to their lives. In fact, the purpose of education was never merely to pass exams. Education is meant to prepare a person for life—to give them the ability to think, understand, and make decisions. It teaches them not just information, but how to use that information. But when education is reduced to just marks, it loses sight of its original purpose. The solution to the problem lies in this understanding. As long as we view education solely as an "outcome," the problem will persist. We need to focus on the process—how children are learning, whether they truly understand, and whether they are able to apply their knowledge. Curricula must be designed to inspire children to think and experiment. The examination system must be changed to assess understanding and application, not just memorization. The role of teachers is also crucial in this transformation. They must become not just teachers but guides, encouraging children to ask questions, make mistakes, and learn from them. Parents must also change their mindset. Children's success must be measured not just by their grades, but by their skills, confidence, and understanding. The digital age has opened up new avenues for learning, but their true use is only possible if we have the right vision for learning. Simply having access to information isn't enough; understanding and using it is what truly matters. Ultimately, the most important thing is that grades reflect how much you've memorized, but knowledge and skills reflect what you can do. If our education system succeeds in understanding this difference, not only will students' futures be better, but society will also become more capable and aware. Today, we need to seriously ask this question—are we truly becoming educated, or are we just trying to appear educated? Because until we find an honest answer to this question, education will continue to grow, but skills will not.

What Are Vijay's 5 Big Options Right Now? Look At Maharashtra, Bihar, And Karnataka

The political situation in Tamil Nadu remains fluid, with the Governor asking the Tamilaga Vettri Kazhagam (TVK) to demonstrate the actual numbers it has on its side to cross the halfway mark in the assembly. These are situations where the Governor's discretion plays an important role in the ensuing elections. Likely Scenarios In Tamil Nadu President's Rule and one more election before the year-end: President's Rule can be extended six months at a time. So, if it is imposed with no suitable coalition forming the government, fresh elections have to be held, mostly before the year-end, to elect another assembly. The DMK and the AIADMK try to cobble up a government. The two parties together have 106 seats. They will have to show the Governor the support of every single MLA to cross the 118 mark. However, the Pattali Makkal Katchi (PMK) and the Viduthalaï Chiruthaigal Katchi (VCK) cannot cohabit in an alliance - just like, say, the Congress and the Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP). Which means that the minimum possible strength of the alliance is 121, but for that, it will have to include all parties: the Congress's five MLAs, the VCK, the MUL, the CPI, and the CPM's two each, and one each of the DMDK and the AMMK. But for this, every single party leader, such as Premalatha of the DMDK and Dhinakaran of the AMMK, will have to be appeased. Such a formation will thus be a nine-party alliance. TVK aligns with a break-away AIADMK group. The AIADMK splits, with two-thirds of its MLAs claiming to be a new party. For this, at least 34 MLAs of the AIADMK will have to walk out of the parent party and claim to be the original AIADMK. But for this, the leaders will need time to muster the numbers. The key question still would be, will the Governor wait before imposing President's Rule and calling for a fresh election? TVK makes way for multiple Deputy Chief Ministers. They will come from parties like the Congress, the PMK, and others, with the TVK heading a full coalition government. If the PMK does come over, this would mean doing business at least with two regional satraps: the DMDK and the AMMK, leading to a tally of 119. Or, the TVK would need to do business with the Left and the Muslim League, taking the tally to 123. Currently, the Left, Muslim League, and the VCK have pledged to be with the DMK, leaving the TVK with the option of banking on only the PMK (which has already demanded the Deputy Chief Minister post) and the DMDK and the AMMK. All TVK MLAs resign. This would reduce the legitimacy of the mandate. But there are past precedents. In 1972, all 14 CPM MLAs elected to the Bengal assembly refused to participate in the functioning of the assembly, as they called the election illegitimate. Such a step would exert the most pressure, but it remains to be seen whether things will come to this. The next 48-72 hours shall be the most interesting ever in Tamil Nadu politics. In the recent past, India has seen three instances of assemblies throwing up hung verdicts and Governors exercising their discretion. The outcomes have varied widely. Here's a recap Bihar, 2005: A Year Of Two Assembly Elections This was the year when two assembly elections were held in Bihar.

No Permanent Rivals In Politics As Vijay Turns Tamil Nadu Into 3-Way Battle

Ahead of C Joseph Vijay's possible oath as Chief Minister of Tamil Nadu and forming the state's first coalition government since 1952, the saga of cobbling together the numbers and staking his claim was filled with conniving conspiracies, desperate manoeuvres to keep the actor-turned-politician out, gubernatorial delays in the swearing-in, and a level of political uncertainty the state has never witnessed. It exposed the two Dravidian parties, the way the Vijay verdict has shaken up Tamil Nadu politics, the opportunism that drives politics, and TVK's inexperience in handling such situations. Back in 2006, when former Chief Minister J Jayalalithaa formed an alliance with MDMK chief Vaiko, she told waiting reporters that "there are no permanent friends or allies in politics." Surely, she would not have expected her party's future leadership to take her words so literally as to explore an alliance with the DMK. Over the last 48 hours, Chennai was abuzz with reports that the DMK and AIADMK were in talks to work out an arrangement to keep Vijay out of power, with the BJP allegedly facilitating it by delaying his swearing-in. DMK and AIADMK sources confirmed that back-channel proposals were seriously considered. One proposal was to install an Edappadi Palaniswami government, offering cabinet berths to the DMK's allies such as the Left and VCK, with DMK support from outside. This idea was reportedly pushed by younger leaders and those close to Udhayanidhi Stalin. However, senior DMK leader and parliamentary party chief Kanimozhi Karunanidhi led the charge to thwart any such effort and even threatened to leave the party if it proceeded with the experiment, claim sources. Fortunately, what would have been a travesty of the people's mandate for Vijay and an indelible blot on the state's polity was not carried out. In fact, the TVK's firm warning that all its MLAs would resign if any effort was made to keep it out of power also showed it was not buckling under pressure and forced the other parties to fall in line. Finally, the Left and VCK stuck with the TVK after the DMK decided not to force their hand. The mere fact that the AIADMK and DMK could even explore an alliance is flabbergasting and perhaps foretells the times to come in a state that has only seen two-party decisive mandates in its history. Yes, the DMK and AIADMK share ideological roots, but it is hard for any observer of Tamil politics to have imagined a day when the Two Leaves and the Rising Sun could ally with each other. The reason for this tectonic shift is that Tamil Nadu has moved from a two-way fight to a genuine three-party verdict. This may be the new reality for a state unaccustomed to such political uncertainty. The TVK, DMK, and AIADMK are now the three poles. Until the TVK decimates either the AIADMK or the DMK -- or the other two finish off the TVK -- Tamil Nadu may have to get used to such uncertainty. To reiterate the numbers: The TVK has 108 seats (effectively 107, as Vijay has won two). The Congress has 5 MLAs, the two Left parties have 4 each, and the VCK has 2. This takes the alliance to 118 - an absolute majority. On the other hand, the DMK has 59 and the AIADMK has 47. If all the smaller pre-poll allies, including the Left and VCK, stay where they are, then the DMK-AIADMK alliance can also show an absolute majority of 120 without the Congress and the BJP. All parties were taken aback by this verdict in Tamil Nadu, as a three-way fight resulted in a hung verdict. The speed and manner in which the TVK formed an alliance with the Congress also startled the BJP, which had preferred the TVK to align with the AIADMK. Its sole objective is to keep the Congress out of power. Vijay has also been cold toward the AIADMK and showed no interest in an alliance with the Two Leaves. This was because he felt it would be easier to manage smaller parties than a large ally - and also because the AIADMK is now a BJP ally. Similarly, the PMK, with its four MLAs, was an option, but it refused to break ties with the BJP, a precondition for any alliance with Vijay, who is aligned with the Congress. Vijay's immediate decision to ally with the Congress, and the manner in which the Congress abandoned the DMK, ruffled many feathers. This move sparked talks between the two Dravidian parties. The situation was further accelerated by the delay in the swearing-in ceremony, which is widely seen as orchestrated by the BJP. Each side had its own reasons. For Edappadi Palaniswami, it is a matter of political survival and perhaps his last shot at power - he has the most at stake. The DMK fears that a Vijay-led government could become like MGR's - a chief ministership for life - and believes now is the only time to stop him. For the BJP, the goal remains simple: keeping the Congress out of power. What this means is that Tamil Nadu's polity will remain in a state of flux in the short term. It is a fractured mandate, but, ironically, one with a clear winner in Vijay. The fact that he struggled to cobble together the 118 seats needed shows both his difficulty in building a coalition and the determination of every established force to keep him out. The road ahead will be uncertain, as the DMK retains a strong hold over parties like the VCK, the Left, and even the Congress at the local level.

Hyderabad-based Skyroot Aerospace becomes India’s first space-tech unicorn

AGENCY

New Delhi: Hyderabad-based private space launch startup Skyroot Aerospace on Thursday, May 7, said it has raised $60 million in a fresh funding round led by existing investors Sherpalo Ventures and Singapore’s sovereign wealth fund GIC, becoming India’s first space-tech unicorn. The latest investment round also saw participation from BlackRock, the founders of Greenko Group, Arkam Ventures, Playbook Partners, Shangkhi Family Office and several other investors. While Playbook Partners and Shangkhi Family Office joined the company as new investors, Sherpalo Ventures, GIC, BlackRock, Greenko Group and Arkam Ventures were existing backers of the space-tech startup. Following the fresh capital infusion, Skyroot Aerospace’s valuation has climbed to $1.1 billion, more than doubling from its previous valuation of nearly $519 million in 2023. Lt. Gen. A.K. Bhatt (Retd.), Director General of the Indian Space

Association (ISPA), described the development as a landmark moment for India’s private space ecosystem. He said Skyroot’s unicorn status reflects the growing technological and commercial capabilities of Indian space startups and signals rising global investor confidence in the country’s space sector. According to him, the milestone could further strengthen India’s ambitions of increasing its share in the global space economy by 2033. Meanwhile, Skyroot co-founder and CEO Pawan Kumar Chandana said the company is preparing for the launch of Vikram-1, India’s first privately developed orbital rocket, in the coming weeks. He added that the latest funding round reflects strong investor confidence in the company’s long-term vision and launch capabilities. The company said the fresh capital will be used to increase launch frequency for Vikram-1, expand manufacturing capabilities and support the development of Vikram-2, a next-generation launch vehicle with a one-tonne payload capacity and an advanced cryogenic upper stage. Skyroot noted that its 2022 Vikram-S mission successfully demonstrated the company’s launch technology, while Vikram-1 is designed to carry payloads into orbit. Sherpalo Ventures Founder and Managing Partner Ram Shriram said he has backed Skyroot since its early days and expressed confidence in the startup’s progress towards the Vikram-1 mission. The latest round has taken Skyroot Aerospace’s total funding to more than $160 million, or around Rs 1,500 crore. Following the fresh capital infusion, Skyroot Aerospace’s valuation has climbed to $1.1 billion.

TikTok scales back AI-generated video descriptions after absurd errors

AGENCY

Washington: TikTok has rowed back on an AI feature which incorrectly summarised some videos on the platform, including claiming a celebrity was fruit. The company’s ‘AI overviews’ recently began appearing beneath content on the platform to describe what a video was showing, or provide more context. While only rolled out to some users in the US and the Philippines, the feature’s incorrect and bizarre AI-generated summaries of TikTok content - seen beneath videos of celebrities like platform star Charli D’Amelio - have been shared widely. According to TikTok, its experimental summaries have been tweaked to only suggest products similar to those shown in videos. The changes were first reported by news outlet Business Insider. Much like the AI Overviews at the top of most Google search results, TikTok’s AI-generated overviews would attempt to sum up the contents of videos for some users when they clicked to see more of a video’s caption. Some examples screenshots by users and seen by the BBC showed videos on the platform being accurately described, but Business Insider also identified a number of “wildly inaccurate” AI overviews. This included one which saw a video of dancer Charli D’Amelio described as a “collection of various blueberries with different toppings,” the publication said. It saw similarly vague, inaccurate and strange AI-generated summaries on other TikTok videos of celebrities and artists, including Shakira and Olivia Rodrigo. The feature will now only be used to surface information about items in videos, according to TikTok. It comes as tech firms look to deploy more AI products on their platforms to boost user engagement. However, some such efforts have been met with user backlash, or mockery, when these tools go awry. ‘Cutting through water’ Posts reacting to TikTok’s testing of AI overviews on its videos first began appearing in January. But it appears the summaries were made more widely available, with several users and creators highlighting AI-generated descriptions containing absurd mistakes in late April. A recent example shared on Reddit saw a performance by ballroom dancers Reagan and Juli T described in an AI overview on TikTok as “a person repeatedly striking their head with a rubber chicken”. Other examples shared by TikTok users contained similarly strange descriptions. For instance, AI overviews for two separate videos, neither of which featured violence or tools, said they featured “a person repeatedly striking their head with a hammer”. According to TikTok, users were able to report and provide feedback about AI overviews. But this did not stop some from speculating as to whether the platform was “trolling” its users. “The new AI Overview is so bad it feels like it has to be a joke,” wrote TikTok user and creator Brett Vanderbrook alongside his video.

Shell latest oil giant to see profits surge due to Iran war impact

AGENCY

Washington: Shell has become the latest energy giant to report a jump in profits following the sharp increase in oil prices since the beginning of the Iran war. It reported profits of $6.92bn (£5.1bn) for the first three months of the year, which was higher than analysts had expected and up from $5.58bn in the same period a year earlier. The price of oil has soared since the start of the US-Israel war with Iran as the key Strait of Hormuz, which usually carries about 20% of the global supplies of oil and liquid natural gas (LNG), has been effectively closed. Last week, rival oil giant BP said its profits for the first three months of the year had more than doubled. Other oil firms have also reported bumper results. On Wednesday, Norway’s Equinor said profits in the first three months of the year had hit $9.77bn, its highest quarterly profit for three years.

Traders profit

Shell chief executive Wael Sawan said: “Shell delivered strong results enabled by our relentless focus on operational performance in a quarter marked by unprecedented disruption in global energy markets. “The safety of our people remains our priority as we work closely with governments and customers to address their energy needs.” Like BP, one of the factors behind Shell’s profits rise was better results from its oil trading business. Before the conflict began, the price of Brent crude, the global benchmark for oil prices, was around $73 a barrel. Since then, oil has seen sharp swings - peaking above $120 at one point, but also falling below $100 on other occasions as speculation has swirled over when the Strait of Hormuz will reopen. The big movements in the oil price that have been seen since the Iran war began can widen the gap between buying and selling prices.

RUSSIA AND UKRAINE ACCUSE EACH OTHER OF BREACHING VICTORY DAY CEASEFIRE

AGENCY Kyiv: Russia and Ukraine have accused each other of violating separate ceasefires declared by each side to cover the celebrations of the Soviet Union's victory over Nazi Germany. The Russian defence ministry reported more than 1,000 violations in the conflict zone, while Moscow's mayor said the city had been targeted by drones since the ceasefire began at midnight local time (21:00 GMT Thursday). Ukraine also said Russia had continued to strike its positions since that time. Russian President Vladimir Putin announced a ceasefire for 8-9 May ahead of Victory Day celebrations on Saturday. Kyiv had earlier called for an indefinite truce, starting 6 May. Russia has warned Ukraine not to try to attack the Victory Day parade in Red Square. Its defence ministry has threatened to launch a "retaliatory, massive missile strike" on the centre of Kyiv if Moscow is attacked. It has warned foreign diplomats to leave the Ukrainian capital ahead of 9 May. For the first time in nearly two decades there will be no military hardware at the parade, while the Russian capital is on high alert over the fears that Ukraine could try to disrupt the events. Residents of Moscow and St Petersburg have also been warned their mobile internet access will be limited for security reasons. The celebrations used to bring large numbers of foreign guests to Moscow, but this time only the leaders of Belarus, Malaysia and Laos, and a few other dignitaries, will attend. In a post on Telegram on Friday morning, the Russian defence ministry said there had been 1,365 violations of the ceasefire, including 153 artillery strikes and 887 drone strikes in the conflict zone. It said Ukraine was also continuing to strike civilian targets in border areas of the Kursk and Belgorod regions, close to the conflict zone. Russian armed forces provided a "mirror response" to the violations, the ministry added. Meanwhile Moscow Mayor Sergey Sobyenin said some 20 drones had been downed near the city in just the first two hours of the ceasefire. Ukrainian strikes were also reported on industrial sites in the Perm and Yaroslavl regions, as well as sites in the Rostov region and the Chechen capital Grozny. Thirteen airports in southern Russia also suspended operations after a drone attack. Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky posted on Telegram that there had been more than 140 attacks on Ukrainian positions in the first few hours of the truce, and more than 850 drone strikes. "All of this clearly indicates that there was not even a simulated attempt from the Russian side to cease fire at the front,"

he said. "Just like in the results of the past day, Ukraine will act in kind today." On Thursday Ukraine accused Russia of breaching Kyiv's unilateral ceasefire, launching drone attacks, including on a kindergarten in Sumy region. Two people were killed in that attack, although no children were present at the time. The war of words over ceasefires came after European Council President António Costa said he thought there was "potential" for the EU to negotiate with Russia over ending the war, and said they had Zelensky's backing to do so. "I'm talking with the [EU's] 27 national leaders to see the best way to organise ourselves and to identify what we need effectively to discuss with Russia when it comes to the right moment to do this," he said in an interview with the Financial Times on Thursday. "We cannot change the geography. We are in Europe, we are neighbours of Russia, and of course we need to talk with them about the future of the security architecture of Europe," he added. Kremlin spokesman Dmitry Peskov responded that Russia was ready for dialogue but "will not initiate such contacts ourselves". The US has mediated several rounds of talks between Russia and Ukraine but so far without any breakthrough, and there are concerns that Washington is now distracted by the war in the Middle East. Speaking on a visit to Italy on Friday, Secretary of State Marco Rubio said the US was still prepared to mediate but did not want to waste time if progress was not being made. Zelensky said he expected US envoys to come to Kyiv in the next few weeks. Separately Ukrainian emergency personnel are battling a huge wildfire in the exclusion zone at Chernobyl, known at the time of the nuclear disaster in the former Soviet Union by its Russian name, Chernobyl.

International cyber attack disrupts swathe of universities and schools

AGENCY Canada: A cyber attack hit several universities and schools in the US, Canada and Australia, causing chaos, confusion and major disruptions amid the high stakes end-of-year season. The hacking group ShinyHunters reportedly claimed responsibility for the attack, which caused the academic software Canvas used by thousands of schools and universities to go offline this week. By late Thursday, the company Instructure, which owns Canvas, posted an update on its website saying that Canvas was "available for most users", but some universities were still reporting outages on Friday. The cyber attacks targeted universities and schools across the globe, affecting an estimated 9,000 institutions. The University of Sydney told students on Friday "Canvas was unavailable" and instructed students not to attempt to log in. "We are one of approximately 9000 institutions around the world that are impacted by this outage, and we are still waiting for advice from Instructure," the university wrote in an announcement on its website.

White House calls Mark Hamill 'sick' after actor's Trump grave post

AGENCY Washington: The White House has called Star Wars actor Mark Hamill "one sick individual" after he posted "an AI-generated image of US President Donald Trump in a 'shallow grave, alongside the caption "if only". The image, posted on Hamill's Bluesky account, showed Trump lying with his eyes shut, next to a headstone with the inscription "Donald J. Trump 1946-2024". Hamill, who played Luke Skywalker in the original Star Wars films from 1977 onwards, later deleted the post and apologised. "Actually, I was wishing him the opposite of dead, but apologize if you found the image inappropriate," he wrote. BBC News has asked the actor's representatives for a comment on the White House remarks about him. In the now-deleted X post, Hamill - who has also voiced the Joker character in various DC Comics projects - wrote that Trump "should live long enough to witness his inevitable devastating loss in the midterms, be held accountable for his unprecedented corruption, impeached, convicted & humiliated for his countless crimes. Long enough to realize he'll be disgraced in the history books, forevermore." The White House press team responded on the same platform, calling Hamill "one sick individual". "These Radical Left lunatics 'just can't help themselves," they replied. "This kind of rhetoric is exactly what has inspired three assassination attempts in two years against our President." Last month, a man fired a shotgun outside the White House Correspondents' Dinner in Washington, in what the authorities have said was an attempt to assassinate Trump. Following the shooting, Melania Trump and other US officials demanded that comedian and TV chat show host Jimmy Kimmel be sacked by ABC after he joked on-air, in a parody sketch days before the shooting, that the first lady had a "glow like an expectant widow". Mrs Trump said Kimmel's "hateful and violent rhetoric" was intended to divide the US, adding: "It is time for ABC to take a stand.

Three dead after volcano erupts on Indonesian island

AGENCY Indonesia: Three people hiking on Indonesia's Mount Dukono have died after the volcano erupted on Friday morning. Videos and pictures of the eruption show the volcano, located on North Maluku island, spewing a column of ash stretching 10km (six miles) into the sky. The three victims were part of a group of 20 Singaporeans and Indonesians hiking on the mountain despite restrictions. The rest of the group was eventually located by rescuers and evacuated from the mountain. The volcano has erupted more than 200 times since last March. Officials had previously issued warnings against climbing the mountain due to safety concerns. The latest eruption took place at 07:41 local time (22:41 GMT Thursday), when there were several people on the mountain on early morning hikes.

IRAN ACCUSES US OF 'RECKLESS MILITARY ADVENTURE'

AGENCY Tehran: Iran's Foreign Minister Abbas Araghchi has accused the US of opting for a "reckless military adventure" every time a "diplomatic solution is on the table". Iranians would "never bow to pressure", Araghchi said in a post on X, a day after both sides accused each other of launching attacks in the Strait of Hormuz and as the US fired on more Iranian vessels. "Is it a crude pressure tactic?", his Iranian counterpart asked. "Or the result of a spoiler once again duping POTUS [US President Donald Trump] into another quagmire?" Despite the clashes, Trump said the ceasefire was intact. It is meant to enable talks to end the war that the US and Israel launched in February. Iran is expected to respond to US proposals on Friday, according to US Secretary of State Marco Rubio. "I hope it's a serious offer, I really do," Rubio said during a visit to Italy. Iran has been controlling the Strait of Hormuz as well as attacking US allies in the Gulf in retaliation for the US and Israeli attacks. Some 20% of the world's oil and liquefied natural gas uses the crucial waterway whose blockade has sent prices soaring. Early this week, Iranian-flagged unladen oil tankers attempting to pull into an Iranian port on the Gulf of Oman "in violation of the ongoing US blockade". US forces had fired "precision munitions into their smokestacks, preventing the non-compliant ships from entering Iran," the statement said. The new attack followed Thursday's exchanges in the Strait of Hormuz, which both sides blamed on each other. Centcom accused Iran of launching missiles, drones and small boats against three of its warships, in what it called an "unprovoked attack". Iran's top military command, meanwhile, alleged the US had targeted an Iranian oil tanker and another vessel approaching the Strait of Hormuz and carried out "aerial attacks" on several coastal areas.

Third British national has suspected hantavirus infection, government says

AGENCY London: A third British national has suspected hantavirus in connection with an outbreak on board the cruise ship MV Hondius, the government has said. The patient is currently on the remote Atlantic island of Tristan da Cunha, where the ship stopped in mid-April. Two other British men have confirmed cases - one remains in a stable condition in the Netherlands after being evacuated from the ship on Wednesday, while the other remains in intensive care after being flown to South Africa last month. Five cases of hantavirus have been confirmed, including one of the three passengers on the cruise who died. The MV Hondius is expected to dock in the Canary Islands at the weekend, where the government has confirmed it will be met by a chartered plane to fly the remaining British passengers and crew on the cruise ship back to the UK. Although none of the remaining Britons are currently displaying symptoms, they will be asked to isolate upon their return home. British national

Martin Anstee, a 56-year-old retired police officer and an expedition guide on board the MV Hondius, was evacuated to the Netherlands on Wednesday alongside a 41-year-old Dutch crew member and a 65-year-old German. He remains in a stable condition and told the BBC that he was "fine". Another British passenger, 69, has a confirmed case and was medically evacuated to South Africa at the end of April. He remains in intensive care and has been said by officials to be "doing better". Two other British nationals are already self-isolating at home in the UK after potential exposure. They are doing so voluntarily and do not have any symptoms. They were part of a group of 30 people from a dozen nations - including seven Britons - who disembarked from the ship at St Helena in the south Atlantic on 24 April, according to operator Oceanwide Expeditions. The operator said the first confirmed case of hantavirus was not reported until 4 May and that all guests who disembarked the ship had been contacted.

SOUTH AFRICA PRESIDENT FACES CALL TO RESIGN AFTER COURT RULING

AGENCY South African opposition leader Julius Malema has called on President Cyril Ramaphosa to resign after the Constitutional Court ruled that parliament had violated the constitution by blocking moves to impeach him in 2022. The judgement follows a legal challenge by Malema's Economic Freedom Fighters (EFF) and others, and could result in fresh impeachment proceedings. Ramaphosa's office said he respects the judgement. In 2022, an independent panel said Ramaphosa may have a case to answer after burglars stole $580,000 (£430,000) in cash, hidden in a sofa, from his rural home. The theft led to allegations that he had not accounted for where the cash had come from. The president denied wrongdoing. But impeachment proceedings were blocked four years ago in a parliamentary vote. At that time Ramaphosa's African National Congress (ANC) had a majority in parliament, but since the 2024 general election the ANC has been governing in a coalition.

Worldwide race to trace passengers from hantavirus-hit cruise ship

AGENCY Washington: Health authorities across the globe are racing to trace dozens of people who disembarked from a cruise ship before an outbreak of hantavirus was detected, and anyone who has come into close contact with them since. Five cases have now been confirmed, including three deaths, following an outbreak on the Dutch vessel MV Hondius, the World Health Organization has said. The UN health agency also said the outbreak is not the start of pandemic like Covid six years ago, because this hantavirus strain spreads through "close, intimate contact". But given the incubation period of this disease - which can be up to six weeks - it is possible more cases may be reported, the WHO said. About 150 passengers and crew from 28 countries are reported to have initially been aboard the vessel, but dozens got off on the island of St Helena on 24 April. The luxury cruise, operated by Oceanwide Expeditions, began its journey on 1 April in Ushuaia, Argentina, and is expected to arrive in Spain's Canary Islands on 10 May. Hantavirus typically spreads from rodents, with people infected by breathing in air contaminated with virus particles from rodent urine, droppings, or saliva. Rare instances of human transmission have been documented with the Andes strain, which is behind this outbreak. It is the first known transmission of the virus on a boat, the WHO said on Thursday. The WHO is in touch with officials in at least 12 countries who are monitoring citizens that returned home. Those countries include Canada, Denmark, Germany, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Singapore, Sweden, Switzerland, Turkey, the United Kingdom and the United States. One expert told the BBC the outbreak response has been "highly chaotic and uncoordinated" but there was little general risk to the public. Here is what we know about the countries affected so far: Seven Brits disembarked the MV Hondius in St Helena on 24 April before the first confirmed case of hantavirus was reported on 4 May, with four remaining there.

MAX VERSTAPPEN TAKES ON SUPER GT CHALLENGE AT FUJI AHEAD OF 24H NURBURGRING

AGENCY

The performance comes ahead of his debut at the ADAC RAVENOL 24h Nurburgring - widely regarded as the world's toughest endurance race - taking place from May 14-17. The action was captured in a Red Bull Motorsports YouTube video hosted by Jeremiah Burton of BigTime. It is now available to watch. LUKA DONCIC INJURY UPDATE:

"Frustrated" Lakers Star Admits Grade 2 Hamstring Strain Could Delay Playoff Return

AGENCY
Texas: The mood around the Los Angeles Lakers is starting to change as Luka Doncic's injury recovery becomes a bigger concern with every passing game. What initially looked like a short playoff setback is now threatening to seriously damage the Lakers' postseason hopes against the Oklahoma City Thunder. As pressure builds in the Western Conference semi-finals, Los Angeles may now have to prepare for the possibility of spending most, if not all, of the series without one of the NBA's most important players. That concern grew stronger after Doncic shared the clearest update yet on his hamstring injury. The Slovenian guard revealed doctors originally told him the recovery process could take around eight weeks after scans confirmed the Grade 2 strain. Doncic spoke publicly for the first time since suffering the injury and admitted the original medical timeline was never short-term. "The moment the day I did the MRI on the hamstring, the doctor told me eight weeks at the beginning," Doncic said. "I'm doing everything I can in the process, and I think we're on a good way. But at the beginning, he told me eight weeks." That timeline creates a huge challenge for the Lakers. Even if the series reaches Game 7, it would still arrive before the full recovery window is complete. Doncic said he has returned to running and on-court workouts, but he still has not been cleared for contact drills. Los Angeles Lakers trying to survive long enough for Luka Doncic return The Lakers star also travelled to Spain for specialised platelet-rich plasma treatment as part of his recovery process. Doncic explained why he trusted the medical work there. "Everybody knows that Spain, they are just one of the best countries to do that," said Doncic, who began his professional career with Real Madrid before entering the NBA.

Why Veteran NFL Coach Frank Reich Believes He Can Finally Fix New York Jets' Broken Offense

AGENCY
Mumbai: For the third straight year, the New York Jets have tried their luck in a desperate bid to find a winning formula for their struggling offense. And while it may seem like the same story year after year, this time around, they chose an offensive mind with one of the most extensive resumes in the game, veteran head coach Frank Reich. Frank Reich, 64, had all the reasons in the world to avoid yet another NFL reconstruction project. But instead, he admitted his desire to face a new challenge head-on was the very reason he decided to take on the New York Jets' problematic offense as its new coordinator. Coming off multiple seasons of instability, underperforming quarterbacks, and frequent changes to the coaching staff, the Jets hope Reich is finally the man to fix it. Frank Reich Takes On Big Challenge Of Building New York Jets' Offense Frank Reich's hiring follows a disappointing offensive campaign from the Jets, once again ranking among the lowest-scoring teams in the NFL. In the past 16 years, the organization has had 12 different coordinators in charge of the offense, giving them a well-deserved reputation for being one of the most challenging franchises to work with as an offensive coach or quarterback. Yet Reich seems excited rather than intimidated by the challenge. Geno Smith and Frank Reich May Be New York Jets' Most Crucial Pairing In NFL History The New York Jets now welcome veteran quarterback Geno Smith to the starting roster following an eventful stint with the Las Vegas Raiders. As a former coach of the Indianapolis Colts and Carolina Panthers, Reich mentioned recently how difficult circumstances have motivated him ever since his playing days in football. "It just reminded me of my love for the game, for the sport, for the purity of just coaching, being out on the field with the guys," he shared. This was proven in his career too, as he led two significant comebacks during his time as the quarterback of the Maryland Terrapins and the Buffalo Bills in the NFL playoffs.

CZECH HOLAN NAMED AS RIDER KILLED AT NORTH WEST 200

AGENCY
Czech Republic: The rider killed in an accident at the North West 200 on Thursday has been named as Kamil Holan, from the Czech Republic. The crash occurred at Station Corner in the opening Superbike qualifying session on Thursday morning in Northern Ireland. Holan, 48, is the first fatality at the North West 200 since Malachi Mitchell-Thomas was killed in a Supertwins race in 2016, and he is the 20th to lose their life in the 97-year history of the event. Hefty74, Holan's team, led tributes to the Czech rider, saying "above all he was a wonderful friend and a man of great character". "Kamil, you were an inspiration, support and a partner in life and on the track. Your humility, passion and smile will be missed every second," Hefty74 posted on Facebook. "Your legacy will live on in Hefty74 and in our hearts. We express our deepest and most sincere condolences to his entire family and all his loved ones". One of a number of international riders competing at the road race in Northern Ireland, Holan, who lived in Prague, first raced at the North West 200 in 2022. His most notable victory came at the Manx Grand Prix in 2012, when he won the Newcomers 'A' race to become the first rider from the Czech Republic to win at the event. Holan also raced at the Isle of Man TT and had a best finish of 20th in the 2018 Superbike race, was a regular in European road racing and a multiple race winner in his native Czech Republic.

Aston Villa Rout Nottingham Forest To Reach Europa League Final Against Freiburg

AGENCY
London: John McGinn scored twice as Aston Villa routed Nottingham Forest 4-0 in the Europa League on Thursday to reach their first major European final in 44 years. McGinn's second-half goals were almost identical left-footed shots from the edge of the area to cap a dominant display at Villa Park in the second leg of the all-English semifinal to the delight of roaring fans, including Prince William, who joined in singing "Sweet Caroline" after the final whistle. Villa advanced 4-1 on aggregate and will face German club Freiburg in the May 20 final in Istanbul. Freiburg beat 10-man Braga 3-1 on Thursday to advance 4-3 on aggregate. It's Villa's first major European final since it triumphed over Bayern Munich in the European Cup in 1982. Villa coach Unai Emery has won the Europa League title four times — three with Sevilla and one with Villarreal. Emiliano Buendia was involved in the opening two goals. The midfielder left behind several defenders on the left side of the area and sent a low cross for Ollie Watkins to tap in the opener in the 36th minute. Watkins scored just minutes after he got his head bandaged from a cut sustained in a clash with Forest defender Morato. Buendia added the second goal from the penalty spot in the 58th minute. McGinn made it 3-0 on the night in the 77th and doubled his tally three minutes later.

NBA Legend LeBron James' Historic 300-Game Playoff Mark Overshadowed As Oklahoma City Thunder Push Lakers To Brink

AGENCY

Oklahoma: Pressure is rapidly building around the Los Angeles Lakers after another difficult night against the Oklahoma City Thunder, but even in defeat, LeBron James managed to add another chapter to a postseason career unlike anything the NBA has ever seen. As questions continue growing around the Lakers' title hopes and ability to keep pace with Oklahoma City's speed and depth, James quietly crossed a milestone that may never be matched again. The 41-year-old officially became the first player in league history to appear in 300 NBA playoff games. The achievement arrived during Los Angeles' 125-107 loss in Game 2 of the Western Conference semi-finals, a result that pushed the Lakers into a worrying 0-2 hole before the series heads back to California. LeBron James reaches historic NBA playoff milestone in Lakers loss What makes the record even more remarkable is the distance between James and the rest of basketball history. Former Lakers guard Derek Fisher remains second all-time with 259 playoff appearances, while legends such as Tim Duncan, Robert Horry and Kareem Abdul-Jabbar complete the top five. James reached the mark during his 23rd NBA season, continuing a level of longevity the league has rarely witnessed. Across more than two decades, he has carried three separate franchises deep into the postseason while missing the playoffs only four times in his career.

Even at 41, his production has barely dropped. The four-time NBA champion averaged 20.9 points, 6.1 rebounds, 7.4 assists and 1.2 steals this season, numbers that still place him among the NBA's elite players despite constant discussions about retirement, roster changes and the Lakers' long-term future. Against Oklahoma City, James finished with 23 points, six assists and three steals in 38 minutes. He also appeared to be dealing with physical discomfort after taking several hard falls, at times grabbing his right hip and wrist during play.

Oklahoma City Thunder Push Lakers to Brink Despite LeBron James' Big Night The individual milestone offered little relief for Los Angeles once the final buzzer sounded. Oklahoma City again looked younger, quicker and far more comfortable dictating the pace of the series, leaving the Lakers searching for answers before Game 3. The Thunder's defensive pressure repeatedly disrupted the Lakers' half-court offence, while their transition play exposed deeper roster concerns that continue hovering around Los Angeles during this postseason push.

Robert Downey Jr. Says Declaring Influencers the “Stars of the Future” Is “Absolute Horsesh

As content creators and mainstream Hollywood continue to intersect in the age of social media, Robert Downey Jr. doesn’t think influencers should be declared the “stars of the future.” The Oscar winner recently sat down for an interview on the Conversations for our Daughters podcast, where he compared modern-day influencers with creatives who actually “want to build something” meaningful. “It was also a time when in the late ‘70s, early ‘80s, dangerous though it was, there was this sense that the competition wasn’t so stiff that you shouldn’t even bother trying,” Downey Jr. explained. “Whereas nowadays, people can create a celebrity without ever doing much besides rolling a phone on themselves. I don’t look at that as a negative thing. I just look at it as more like the challenge for individuation is being upped.” The Avengers: Doomsday star continued, “Hopefully the grosser part of the youth of — let’s just call it America for locality’s sake — is gonna say, ‘Yeah, but that’s not my thing. I want to go do something, I’m going to make something. I want to build something. I want to educate myself and I want to have more inputs,’ so whatever my output is, it isn’t just a self-aggrandizing kind of influencer-type thing.” “When I hear people talk about, ‘Oh, the stars of the future are going to be influencers,’ I go, ‘I don’t know what world you’re living in, but I think that is absolute horseshit,’” he added. As someone who boasts more than 58 million followers on Instagram alone, Downey Jr.

was also asked for his perspective on when an influencer is about novelty, as well as what contribution influencers can make to the lives of their millions of followers. “My now 13-year-old son, he kinda got caught up in this whole influencer thing, and next thing you know, it’s like, ‘Hey, if you like the way I’m playing this video game, do you wanna send me a donation?’ And really, it becomes a religion,” the Iron Man actor said. “So there’s something about the influencers today that are almost like the Evangelical hucksters of the information age. At the same token, it’s different because we’re playing in this new territory and so it’s a little bit of a frontier and I don’t really have a judgment on it.
