Speaking on the occasion, Chandrababu Naidu said the government is implementing the Sanjeevani programme under a Predictive, Preventive and Curative healthcare model with the philosophy that "Health is the Greatest Wealth."

He announced that the programme, launched as a pilot

No power can stop India from being biggest exporter of weapons in 25-30 years: Rajnath

SHIRDI (AHLIYANAGAR) (TSIT):

Signalling a major shift in India's defence manufacturing strategy, Defence Minister Rajnath Singh on Saturday said the private sector is no longer merely a supplier of "nuts and bolts" to the armed forces, but has evolved into an innovator and producer of advanced weapon systems, as the government seeks to transform India into a global hub for munitions and automated warfare systems. Addressing a gathering after inaugurating the state-of-the-art defence and aerospace innovation and production facilities of Nibe Limited in the temple town of Shirdi, Singh said the Centre aims to increase private sector participation in defence manufacturing from the current 25-30 per cent to nearly 50 per cent in the coming years.

"Earlier, the role of the private sector in defence production was negligible. Today, it has reached almost 25 to 30 per cent. We want to scale it up to 50 per cent," the Defence Minister said.

The remarks come amid the government's broader push for indigenisation and self-reliance in strategic sectors under the Atmanirbhar Bharat initiative, particularly in the backdrop of lessons drawn from the Russia-Ukraine conflict and rising geopolitical instability in West Asia, which have highlighted the importance of domestic defence manufacturing capacity and resilient supply chains.

"Our government is continuously emphasising that Make in India should be promoted in critical technologies and advanced systems. To ensure India emerges as a frontrunner in munitions and automated systems, the government is ready to take every necessary step," Singh said.

Lauding the role of Indian industries, he said the country's private sector had developed a strong understanding of future warfare technologies and was increasingly contributing to next-generation defence capabilities. "To make India a hub for munitions and automation, everyone will have to work together. Only when the capabilities of Indian defence companies increase will the country's security framework become even stronger," he said.

Calling for complete self-reliance in defence and space technologies, Singh said: "Self-reliant India means a secure India, a capable India and a powerful India."

TN CM Vijay plans Delhi visit with political outreach, economic demands on agenda

CHENNAI (TSIT):

Tamil Nadu Chief Minister C. Joseph Vijay is preparing for a significant visit to New Delhi, one expected to carry both political and administrative importance. Unlike his previous trip to the national capital as a party leader for questioning in connection with the Karur crowd-tragedy case, Vijay is now set to arrive in Delhi as the head of the Tamil Nadu government with an agenda focused on strengthening political ties and seeking financial support for the state.

Vijay had earlier appeared before the CBI in New Delhi on January 12 and January 19 in connection with investigations linked to the stampede at a public meeting held in Karur on September 27 last year, in which 41 people lost their lives. This time, however, the focus of the visit is expected to be entirely different. Sources indicate that Vijay plans to hold meetings with Prime Minister Narendra Modi, Union Home Minister Amit Shah, and senior Congress leaders, including Sonia Gandhi, Rahul Gandhi, and Congress president Mallikarjun Kharge.

Global oil prices climb as Iran indicates scepticism of agreement with US

NEW DELHI (TSIT)

Global oil prices climbed on the last day of trading week after Iran cast doubt on market hopes for a near-term agreement with the United States. Brent crude rose 0.94 per cent to $103.5 per barrel, while US benchmark WTI gained 0.26 per cent to $96.60 a barrel, reversing part of Thursday's selloff losses that had pushed both benchmarks to their lowest in nearly two weeks.

Iran's Foreign Ministry spokesperson said Tehran could not say an agreement with Washington was close, according to state-linked Tasnim news agency.

US Secretary of State Marco Rubio said there were "some good signs", while stressing that any Iranian attempt to restrict movement through the Strait of Hormuz would remain a red line. The comments followed days of mixed messaging from both sides, while markets rallied on optimistic headlines, and then waited to ascertain if anything actually changed on ground. Traders have grown wary of pricing in news of diplomatic breakthroughs without clear evidence, analysts said. Physical oil markets remain tight, inventories are falling and elevated fuel prices are feeding broader inflation concerns, they added.

Petrol and diesel prices were raised on Saturday by state-owned oil marketing companies, marking the third such increase in about 10 days.

Petrol became costlier by Rs

0.87 per litre, while diesel prices were raised by Rs 0.91 per litre. There is no shortage of petrol, diesel or LPG in the country and petrol pumps that are not giving fuel or giving fuel in reduced quantities are being pulled up, senior government officials said.

The government is receiving feedback about petrol pumps across India and full supply of fuels is being maintained to all retail outlets. About 50 per cent of India's crude and almost 90 per cent of its LPG and LNG imports pass through Hormuz, making it India's single biggest energy vulnerability. Since the closure of the Strait of Hormuz, India has been sourcing 70 per cent of its crude imports via alternative, longer sea routes across the Arctic and the Baltic region.

Hyderabad, 23 May, 2026:Medicover Hospitals, Hyderabad, announced the successful treatment of a 54-year-old patient from Andhra Pradesh who was suffering from recurrent posterior circulation strokes caused by a near-total blockage of the Basilar Artery — one of the brain's most critical blood vessels responsible for supplying blood to the brainstem and posterior brain regions.

the repeated strokes despite optimal medical therapy, the multidisciplinary Neuro Sciences team proceeded with a highly specialized endovascular intervention. On March 17, 2026, the team successfully performed a technically challenging Basilar Artery Stenting procedure, restoring blood flow to the affected region of the brain. The procedure was led by Dr. Annapureddy Jagadish, Consultant Stroke and Interventional Neurologist, along with Dr. Kamepalli Hari Kishore, Consultant Neuro and Interventional Radiologist, supported by the Interventional Radiology, Neurocritical Care, and Rehabilitation teams.

Following the intervention, the patient showed steady neurological recovery with rehabilitation and physiotherapy support and was discharged in stable condition. Speaking on the occasion, Dr. Annapureddy Jagadish said, "Basilar artery stenosis is among the most life-threatening forms of stroke disease because it affects the brainstem, which controls breathing, consciousness, balance, swallowing, speech, and other vital neurological functions. In patients with recurrent strokes despite medication, timely neuro-intervention can become lifesaving."

New Delhi, May 23 : There is no overall shortage of petrol and diesel in the country and outages reported at some retail outlets are "highly localised" and temporary, Indian Oil Corporation (IOC) said on Saturday.

These small outages are caused by regional demand-supply mismatches and shifting sales patterns, the IOC said in a statement. The company is closely monitoring the situation and taking adequate measures to address these isolated situations and ensure uninterrupted fuel supplies to consumers.

“We wish to reassure customers and the general public that there is no overall shortage of petrol and diesel in the country.

The current situation being witnessed at certain retail outlets is highly localised and temporary in nature, arising due to local demand-supply imbalances and redistribution of sales patterns in select areas," according to the statement.

Higher demand at certain retail outlets was caused by a seasonal rise in diesel consumption during the harvesting season, migration of customers from private pumps where retail prices were relatively higher, and increased institutional purchases at public sector outlets.

Only a very small number of outlets in its network of more than 42,000 fuel stations had witnessed supply disruptions, while firms continued to maintain sufficient fuel inventories nationwide and were taking steps to address isolated disruptions and ensure uninterrupted supplies. "Despite this sustained and exceptionally high growth in demand, IndianOil continues to consistently meet customer requirements across the country," it added. Earlier in the day, petrol and diesel prices were increased, marking the third revision in retail fuel rates in just 10 days. Petrol became costlier by Rs 0.87 per litre, while diesel prices were raised by Rs 0.91 per litre by state-owned oil marketing companies. The latest hike comes amid sustained pressure from rising global crude oil prices and ongoing geopolitical tensions in West Asia, which continue to impact international energy markets.

Chandrababu Has Nothing to Show, Resorting to Empty Rhetoric: Opposition Leader Botsa Satyanarayana

● “Super Six Super Hit” is a Complete Lie ● We Will Continue to Question Government Failures: Botsa Satyanarayana

Visakhapatnam (TSIT): Leader of Opposition in the Legislative Council Botsa Satyanarayana alleged that even after completing two years in power, Chief Minister N. Chandrababu Naidu has nothing substantial to showcase and is spending time delivering empty speeches. He said Chandrababu's speech at the recent public meeting in Puthalapattu itself reflected the government's failures. Botsa Satyanarayana addressed the media at his campoffice in Visakhapatnam along with former minister Gudivada Amarnath, former MLA Karanam Dharmasri, and district party president KK Raju. On the occasion, he listed out what he termed as the failures and irregularities of the Chandrababu-led government during the last two years.

Speaking further, Botsa

Satyanarayana said Chandrababu, instead of speaking about the welfare initiatives undertaken by the government, was focusing on attacking opposition leaders in public meetings. He stated that the people of Andhra Pradesh were fully aware of Chandrababu's "management and manipulation of systems." He alleged that despite serving four terms as Chief Minister, Chandrababu repeatedly deceived people by making promises during elections and failing to fulfil them after coming to power. Botsa questioned whether the promises made under the

"Super Six" scheme had actually been implemented. He asked whether the government had delivered the promised "Aadabidda Nidhi," unemployment allowance, and free gas cylinders to women. He also criticized the government for failing to control rising prices of essential commodities and questioned whether any section of society was truly satisfied under the current administration.

Referring to the COVID period, Botsa said former Chief Minister Y. S. Jagan Mohan Reddy had supported people during the crisis and ensured welfare measures reached the poor. He alleged that the current government was neglecting welfare schemes while focusing only on publicity and tours. Botsa also raised questions over the removal of the DSC merit list and demanded clarification from the government. He alleged irregularities in the recruitment process and criticized the Education Department for failing to provide textbooks and kits to students on time. He accused Education Minister Nara Lokesh of speaking more about departments other than his own. Accusing the government of lacking transparency, Botsa alleged corruption and favoritism in several sectors. He claimed there was rampant corruption in Amaravati construction works and criticized the government for failing to deliver meaningful benefits to farmers, students, employees, and the poor. Botsa Satyanarayana asserted that the YSRCP would continue to question the failures, corruption, and irregularities of the government and would intensify public movements if necessary.

Speaking on the occasion, the Collector said that in the wake of the Supreme Court issuing key directions regarding the implementation of the Solid Waste Management Rules-2026, the State Government has been giving special focus to sanitation and scientific waste management. He stated that, as per the directions of the Chief Minister, measures are being taken to fully implement Solid Waste Management regulations in the city. He said that a special action plan is being implemented to keep roads, drains, and public places free from garbage, and added that a month-long special campaign is being conducted under the name "Operation Clean Sweep." He stated that special focus would be given during the first week to the removal of yellow points, red points, and garbage dumps. The Collector said that the main objective is to create awareness among the public on waste management and that GVMC is taking special measures to completely resolve garbage-related issues in merged villages. He appealed for public cooperation in securing the first rank for Visakhapatnam in Swachh Survekshan-2026. GVMC Additional Commissioner Nallanayya.

US-India Relations: Can Marco Rubio Fix It?

In the two-tiered Washington that is the second administration of US President Donald Trump, the top tier makes non-stop trouble, and the second tries to fix it. Marco Rubio, secretary of state and national security advisor, has arrived in India on his first visit as "Mr Fix It." He will attempt to calm Indian nerves and restore a sense that India (still) matters for a myriad geopolitical reasons even if it hasn't felt that way for one long year. On the side, he will talk business. Selling more US and Venezuelan oil for an India caught in a serious energy crisis caused by Trump's war against Iran is on his agenda.

The job of select cabinet members is to recreate old friendly feelings, re-package the past and re-sell a future in Trumpian terms. They recognize the need for allies and partners even if their leader doesn't seem to - only fellow bullies and field marshals get serious presidential attention.

It is in this spirit of repair and maintenance that Rubio's May 23-26 visit should be seen that takes him to Kolkata, Jaipur, Agra and Delhi. He will find that Indian diplomats have shed sentimentality in the year of living dangerously with Trump. The soft frame has changed - it's all hardcore. No lofty messaging, no unrealistic promises and no fuzzy expectations from Delhi. Can Rubio soften the edges and restore greater confidence?

The secretary did quite a job of reassuring the Europeans after Vice President J.D. Vance had berated them at the same venue a year earlier for suppression of free speech and untamed immigration. Rubio may have charmed Europe and celebrated colonialism, empires and missionaries but he raised eyebrows in more than half the world that was colonised. His efforts in India will, no doubt, be more refined because he can be skillful with words. Because Rubio wears two important hats and spends more time in the White House than any other cabinet member as a result, the conversations in Delhi will be real and substantive. Topics include defence cooperation, trade, the Iran war, the energy crisis, Pakistan, China, and the Quad even if Trump shows no interest in the grouping.

Rubio will attend a Quad foreign ministers' meeting with his counterparts - S. Jaishankar, Penny Wong of Australia and Toshimitsu Motegi of Japan - on his last day. To show the group is important, he is sure to recall the fact that his first official engagement after being sworn in as secretary of state was to convene Quad ministers who happened to be in DC for Trump's inauguration. That said, the failure of Quad to convene at the leaders' level does raise questions, especially in light of Trump's overly accommodative stance towards China. The main strategic purpose behind Quad's revival during the first Trump administration was to build a defensive fence of democracies around China and create options for smaller Asian countries. That purpose - never explicitly stated but consistently implied - has been obscured somewhat by the recent US-China summit where Trump and Chinese President Xi Jinping announced the start of a "constructive relationship of strategic stability."

The growing market takeover of public health

The challenge of providing health services to rural and poor India

PRIYANKA SAURABH

In a vast and diverse country like India, public health is not just a question of medical care, but also a matter of social justice, economic equality, and democratic accountability. A nation's progress is measured by the health status of its citizens. If large segments of society are deprived of treatment, medicines, nutrition, and primary health care, claims of economic development prove hollow. Unfortunately, over the past few decades, the health sector has been rapidly commercialized in many countries around the world, including India. Healthcare, which should have been fundamentally a human right, has gradually transformed into a profit-making industry. Private hospitals, expensive medicines, insurance-based treatments, and corporate medical systems have alienated ordinary citizens, especially the poor and rural communities, from healthcare. At this juncture, the role of the Indian state becomes crucial to strengthen the public health system and ensure its access to the grassroots.

The biggest problem in India's healthcare sector is inequality. While metropolitan cities have state-of-the-art hospitals and super-specialty facilities, even primary health centers in remote rural areas lack adequate doctors, medicines, and equipment. According to the World Health Organization, the availability and accessibility of healthcare is a primary responsibility of any democratic state. However, in India, millions of people are unable to access treatment solely due to financial constraints. The cost of private hospitals is so high that a serious illness can push an entire family into poverty. National Health Accounts reports indicate that out-of-pocket expenditure on healthcare in India remains very high. This means that people have to pay a significant portion of their treatment costs out of their own pockets. This is the most dangerous consequence of marketization. To expand public health services, the state must first strengthen the primary health care system. Primary Health Centers (PHCs) and Community Health Centers (CHCs) are considered the backbone of the health system in India's villages and small towns. However, most centers face problems such as a shortage of doctors, lack of medicines, poor buildings, and inadequate equipment. The government should substantially increase the health budget and equip these institutions with modern facilities. Every primary health center should be mandated to have a regular doctor, trained nurses, lab facilities, and essential medicines. If primary health care becomes easier to diagnose and treat, it will reduce pressure on large hospitals and prevent poor people from migrating to cities. Additionally, decentralization of health services is essential. Relying solely on district hospitals poses significant challenges for people in remote areas. State governments should expand health services down to the Panchayat level. Strengthening ASHA workers, Anganwadi services, and community health volunteers can promote health awareness and primary care in rural areas. The COVID-19 pandemic has highlighted the crucial role of locally trained health workers. If these workers are provided with better training, respectable salaries, and resources, they can play a significant role in delivering health services to every household. The use of technology in the health sector can also be an effective means of increasing access at the grassroots level. Systems like telemedicine, mobile health units, and digital health records can help provide specialized services in remote areas. India has many villages where specialist doctors are difficult to reach. Online consultations and digital diagnostic services can play a vital role in such areas. However, technology must be developed as a complementary medium, not a substitute for human contact. Digital health services require the presence of local health workers so that even people with low literacy can benefit from these services. Affordable and universal drug availability is also an essential aspect of public health expansion. Drug prices in the private market are constantly rising. The state should expand Jan Aushadhi Kendras and effectively implement the price-control policy for essential medicines. Availability of free or very affordable medicines for the poor and lower middle class can play a significant role in reducing health inequalities. Essential diagnostic facilities and medicines should also be made available free of charge in government hospitals so that people do not have to rely on private laboratories and medical stores. Lack of human resources is also a major challenge for expanding healthcare services in India. Rural areas face a severe shortage of doctors and specialists, as most physicians prefer to work in urban areas. To address this problem, the government should develop policies that encourage rural service. Making rural service mandatory for medical students, providing better salaries, housing, and security facilities, and providing opportunities for local youth in medical education could be useful steps. Training doctors and health workers from the local community in rural areas would enhance both the sustainability and reliability of healthcare services. Preventive health care must also be prioritized in the public health sector. India's health system still focuses heavily on post-disease treatment, while investment in areas such as sanitation, nutrition, vaccination, and health education remains relatively low. If states strengthen programs such as clean drinking water, nutrition programs, mental health awareness, and regular health checkups, many diseases can be prevented at an early stage. This will not only improve public health but also reduce the financial burden on the health system. The state must also play an active role in regulating the private health sector. Exorbitant fees, unnecessary testing, and commercial exploitation by private hospitals have become commonplace. Patients' helplessness is often exploited as a means to profit. The government must develop a robust regulatory framework that monitors treatment fees, drug prices, and medical ethics. Leaving healthcare solely to the market would be an abdication of the democratic state's responsibility. It is also important to increase the effectiveness of health insurance schemes. Schemes like Ayushman Bharat have provided relief to poor families, but a large number of people remain outside their reach. Insurance schemes often limit hospital-based treatment to primary health services, and primary health services are underserved. The state must ensure that health insurance schemes cover not only treatment but also prevention, nutrition, and primary care. Additionally, public-private partnerships in the health sector must be balanced and transparent. While leveraging private sector expertise and resources can be beneficial, public interest must remain paramount. If profit-making becomes the primary objective, the poor and vulnerable will once again be marginalized.

New Study Links Daily Almond Consumption to Better Brain and Metabolic Health in Adults with Prediabetes

Research by Dr. Anoop Misra and Dr. Seema Gulati, published in the Journal of Nutrition, found improvements in executive function, blood sugar levels, and body composition after 24 weeks of daily almond consumption. New research published in the Journal of Nutrition indicates that a simple dietary change - eating just a few almonds each day - may benefit cognitive performance, metabolic health, and markers for inflammation and oxidative stress in middle-aged Asian Indian adults with prediabetes. Prediabetes affects more than 600 million people worldwide and is linked not only to an increased risk of type 2 diabetes but also to impaired brain function. In the 24-week study conducted in New Delhi, 60 Asian Indian adults aged 40 to 60 with prediabetes but no signs of cognitive decline were randomly assigned to either a control or intervention group after receiving guidance on following a balanced diet consistent with dietary guidelines for Asian Indians. While the control group continued with the same diet, the intervention group consumed a calorie-matched diet that included almonds, with almonds accounting for 20% of daily calories, equivalent to around 32-42g per day. Participants were monitored remotely twice a week and attended in-person visits every four weeks. Researchers assessed cognitive performance, blood glucose levels, HbA1c, blood lipids, weight, BMI and waist circumference at the beginning and end of the study. At the end of the study, participants in the almond group experienced improvements in executive function and processing speed, both key measures of cognitive performance. The group also demonstrated better blood sugar control, including lower fasting blood glucose, lower blood glucose levels two hours after eating, and improvements in HbA1c, a marker of long-term blood sugar control. Additional metabolic benefits included significant reductions in body weight, body fat, BMI, waist circumference, total cholesterol and LDL cholesterol.

Participants consuming almonds also showed improvements in markers related to inflammation and oxidative stress. Previous studies by the same researchers found almonds helped improve blood glucose control and body composition in Asian Indians with prediabetes and type 2 diabetes. This study was the first to explore the potential impact of almonds on cognitive performance in middle-aged Asian Indian adults with prediabetes, a population particularly vulnerable to both metabolic disease and cognitive decline. Dr. Anoop Misra, co-investigator and Chairman, Fortis-CDOC Center of Excellence for Diabetes, Metabolic Diseases, and Endocrinology in New Delhi, believes the findings from this exploratory study have the potential to support better brain health in millions of people around the world. "Adults with prediabetes are vulnerable to a decline in cognitive function," he says. "Our study indicates that just one simple dietary change - adding a small quantity of almonds to the daily diet - may help support brain health and improve cognitive performance in some populations." But almonds offer other health benefits as well. "As with our previous research, we found that diets enriched with almonds benefit metabolic health measures like blood sugar control and body weight," confirms Dr. Misra. "Together, these changes could help lower the risk of prediabetes progressing to type 2 diabetes, a condition associated with an increased risk of dementia." Discussing the findings, Ritika Samaddar said, "With the growing issue of prediabetes and lifestyle-related health concerns, it is encouraging to see research highlighting how a simple dietary addition like almonds may support both metabolic and cognitive health. The findings showing improvements in cognitive function, blood sugar control, body weight, and cholesterol levels reinforce the role of almonds as a superfood.

Rubio Is In India, But Trump's America Just Launched Its Sharpest Attack On Indian Immigrants

As US Secretary of State Marco Rubio arrives in India for the Quad meeting and strategic consultations, the Trump administration is preparing one of the sharpest reversals of long-standing American immigration policy in decades. At the centre of this shift is a new USCIS approach that seeks to restrict adjustment of status inside the United States and push many legal immigrants to complete green card processing from abroad. This is not merely an administrative change. It overturns the logic Congress itself built into the American immigration system. For decades, US law allowed legally admitted migrants to transition from temporary visas to permanent residency while remaining inside the country. Congress deliberately created categories such as the H-1B visa around the idea of "dual intent", where skilled workers could arrive temporarily while eventually seeking permanent settlement. That framework helped build modern American technological dominance. Indian engineers, doctors, researchers, entrepreneurs and students became central to the US economy under exactly this system. Silicon Valley, American hospitals, research universities and technology firms absorbed Indian talent at every level. Now, that same pipeline is being politically targeted. The implications for Indians are enormous because Indians dominate many high-skilled visa categories and already face massive green card backlogs unique to their nationality. Thousands of Indian professionals who spent years following American laws, paying taxes and building lives in the US may now face the prospect of leaving the country during processing with no certainty of return timelines. Families could be split across continents. Careers built over decades could collapse overnight. Children raised in the United States may suddenly face instability because their parents entered a system whose rules are now being rewritten midway. This marks a major transformation in American politics. The Trump movement no longer limits immigration politics to illegal border crossings. Legal immigration itself is increasingly becoming the target. Student visas, employment-based migration, family sponsorship and status adjustment are now all drawn into the same political battle. Indians sit directly in the firing line because they represent one of the most visible and successful immigrant communities in America's high-skilled sectors. The racial undertones have become increasingly difficult to ignore. Across sections of the MAGA ecosystem, Indian professionals are routinely portrayed as people "taking over tech", replacing American workers or changing the cultural balance of the country. Social media platforms are flooded with openly hostile narratives directed specifically at Indian migrants and Indian-Americans. The striking aspect is that many of these migrants represent exactly the profile American conservatives once claimed to support: educated, economically productive, low-crime and legally compliant. The hostility has, therefore, moved beyond questions of legality. It increasingly reflects demographic anxiety and identity politics. Bots, outrage algorithms and coordinated information warfare networks amplify this sentiment daily. Immigration outrage generates clicks, political engagement and emotional mobilisation. Complex immigration law gets reduced into viral slogans designed to trigger resentment. The result is a digital ecosystem where hostility towards Indian professionals has become politically useful. The political calculation behind this shift is straightforward. Trump and his allies see immigration as the most emotionally powerful issue available before the midterms. Expanding the target from illegal immigration to legal immigration broadens the culture war and creates a permanent atmosphere of grievance and anger. The strategy also helps redirect public frustration over inflation, economic uncertainty and governance failures toward immigrants and administrative "loopholes."

AT LEAST 90 KILLED IN CHINESE COAL MINE EXPLOSION, STATE MEDIA REPORTS

At least 90 people have been killed in a coal mine blast in northern China, according to state media. The gas explosion at the Liushenyu Coal Mine in Shanxi province is the worst mining disaster in China since 2009. There were 247 workers reportedly on duty when the blast happened at 19:29 local time on Friday (22:29 GMT), with more than 100 people reportedly pulled to safety and hundreds of rescuers sent to the site. Chinese President Xi Jinping called for no effort to be spared in efforts to treat the injured and search for survivors, and asked the government to investigate the cause of the blast and hold those responsible to account. Twenty-seven people remain in a local hospital, with one in critical condition, while the rest have minor injuries. Most were affected after inhaling poisonous gas, according to state media, though it is not clear what type of gas it was.

Wang Yong, an injured miner, told state media that when the incident happened, he did not hear a sound but saw a sudden plume of smoke. "I smelled sulphur, the same smell you get from blasting. I shouted at people to run. As we were running I could see people collapsing from the fumes. Then I blacked out too," he said. "I lay there for about an hour or so before I came round on my own. I woke up the person next to me and we got out together." Some of the management team at the mine have reportedly been detained. The cause of the gas explosion has not yet been revealed, but state media reported that the levels of carbon monoxide - a highly toxic, odourless gas - in the mine were found to have "exceeded limits".

China's Ministry of Emergency Management has sent 345 personnel from six rescue teams to help with the operation. State media said the rescue operation had encountered difficulties as water has built up near the explosion site, preventing access to certain areas, while blueprints provided by the mine did not match the actual conditions. In 2024, the Liushenyu mine was listed as one of the "severe safety hazards" by the Chinese National Mine Safety Administration. Tongzhou Group, which runs the mine, has reportedly received two administrative penalties in 2025 for safety issues. Shanxi province produces more than a quarter of China's total coal output. This disaster is a reminder of the darkest days of China's coal mining industry. In the early 2000s, deadly accidents were common in coal mines across the country. Safety standards have been tightened in recent years, and there has also been a crack-down on illegal coal mines, especially in Shanxi. But accidents still happen. In 2023, a collapse at an open-pit coal mine in the northern Inner Mongolia region killed 53 people.

FRENCH PAIR HELD UNTIL TRIAL AFTER BOYS ABANDONED BY ROAD IN PORTUGAL

A French woman and her partner will remain in custody after allegedly abandoning her two young boys on a roadside in the south of Portugal, a court has ruled. The boys were found on Tuesday evening crying beside a road near Alcacer do Sal, about 100km (60 miles) south of Lisbon. The woman and her partner, identified by authorities as Marine R and Marc B, were arrested in Fatima on Thursday. As they were being led into court on Saturday morning, the man shouted "I love you" in French and the boys' mother sang. A judge subsequently ordered the pair be placed in pre-trial detention, French and Portuguese media report. They are accused of aggravated assault, endangerment and abandonment of the boys. In Portugal, suspects must be brought before a judge within 48 hours of their arrest to decide whether they remain in custody or are released ahead of their trial. The couple have already been questioned by investigators for several hours. Meanwhile, the children, who are aged four and five, are with a French foster family in Lisbon and are expected to return to France. Authorities told the Setubal courthouse that the two boys had been living with their 41-year-old mother in the eastern French city of Colmar, while their father had limited and supervised visitation rights, local media report. On 11 May, the father reported them missing, prompting authorities to begin searching for the mother and children, and a European arrest warrant being issued.

UK officials suggested single market for goods with Europe

UK officials suggested establishing a single market for goods trade with the EU as part of the next phase of its Brexit reset, the BBC understands. Industry figures briefed on the move said the idea has not been taken forward at this point, after EU scepticism, as attention focuses on the details of existing negotiations over food, farm and energy trade. The move does show significant extra ambition for a closer post-Brexit economic relationship, ahead of a summit in the coming weeks. For weeks Chancellor Rachel Reeves and Prime Minister Sir Keir Starmer have been publicly calling for a much closer economic relationship with the EU in the next phase of post-Brexit talks. There has been little public detail of what that has meant beyond existing talks on single market treatment for the trade in food, farm products, electricity and emissions trading. It has now emerged that UK officials suggested that the agenda for the next summit could be much more ambitious, with one option covering frictionless trade within a UK-EU single market for all goods. A European Commission spokesperson declined to comment on the UK's proposal to the Guardian, which first reported the story, but said they "see scope to deepen" industrial defence cooperation, citing the UK's desire for talks on a Ukraine loan. The government did not confirm the specifics of any conversations, but acknowledged that a range of options were put to the EU in recent months and conversations are ongoing. British business groups have been briefed on the move and the EU's pushback that such an ambitious ask would not be negotiable with the government's existing red lines on, for example, freedom of movement. Some ministers believe that significant recent changes in the US posture to Europe might lead to more flexible thinking in continental capitals about the opportunities of economic reintegration between the UK and EU. A summit is expected in July. In the recent King's Speech, the government announced a European Partnership Bill which will provide a method through which UK and EU law would be aligned in relevant sectors being negotiated.

TULSI GABBARD TO RESIGN AS US NATIONAL INTELLIGENCE DIRECTOR

Tulsi Gabbard will resign from her position as the US director of national intelligence in the Trump administration, citing her husband's recent bone cancer diagnosis. "His strength and love have sustained me through every challenge," she wrote in her resignation letter on Friday. "I cannot in good conscience ask him to face this fight alone while I continue in this demanding and time-consuming position." US President Donald Trump wrote in a social media post that Gabbard had "done an incredible job, and we will miss her". Her resignation is effective as of 30 June. Aaron Lukas, the principal deputy director, will step in as acting director, Trump said. Gabbard, a loyal supporter of Trump during his 2024 presidential campaign, was confirmed as one of the most powerful figures in US intelligence-gathering weeks after he returned to the White House in 2025. But this year she has largely been out of public view even as the US took military action against Iran, put pressure on Cuba, and notably removed Venezuela's president.

Senegal's president sacks PM and former ally after months-long feud

Senegalese President Bassirou Diomaye Faye has sacked Prime Minister Ousmane Sonko and dissolved the nation's government after months of tensions between the two men. A shock decree, read out on TV by a presidential aide, said Faye had "ended the duties" of his one-time political ally Sonko and "consequently those of the ministers and secretaries of state who are members of the government". Sonko, a popular figure among Senegal's youth, said on social media that he would "sleep with a light heart". The split comes as the country faces mounting economic pressure, with its public debt having reached the equivalent of 132% of its GDP, according to the International Monetary Fund (IMF). Sonko's dismissal followed a parliamentary session on Tuesday, during which the prime minister openly criticised Faye for his approach to the debt crisis. Faye was in the unusual situation of owing his position, in large part, to his prime minister's popularity. Sonko would almost certainly have taken the top job had he not been barred from running in 2024's elections due to a defamation conviction. However, Sonko backed Faye's bid for presidency, using the slogan "Diomaye is Sonko, Sonko is Diomaye". The pair went on to unseat then-President Macky Sall - an extraordinary victory given they were both in prison until 10 days before the election. Late on Tuesday night, several hundred students demonstrated on the streets of the capital city, Dakar, declaring their support for Sonko. No details have been provided on the appointment of a new prime minister. Tensions between Sonko and Faye have been on display for months. Faye had reportedly criticised Sonko's "excessive personalisation" within the ruling party Pastef, while Sonko accused the president of a "failure of leadership" for not defending him against his critics. Amid this feud, Senegal's leaders have been grappling with the colossal amount of debt they inherited from the previous government. The IMF has frozen its $1.8bn (£1.3bn) lending programme with Senegal as a result.

Gaza flotilla activists allege abuse by Israeli forces while detained

Pro-Palestinian activists deported after their Gaza-bound aid flotilla was intercepted in international waters by Israeli forces have alleged they were subjected to abuse while held in detention. Canada said it had received information detailing "appalling abuse" of its citizens, while Germany and Spain confirmed that a number of their citizens had injuries. The flotilla's organisers alleged there were "at least 15 cases of sexual assaults" while other people who were detained said they were beaten and mistreated. The BBC has not been able to independently verify the allegations. Israel's prison service has dismissed them as false, saying all detainees were "held in accordance with the law". The Israeli military similarly rejected the allegations, telling the BBC that its orders "require respectful and appropriate treatment of flotilla participants". Warning: This article contains details of alleged abuse some may find distressing More than 50 boats in the Global Sumud Flotilla (GSF) set sail from Turkey last week, planning to breach Israel's maritime blockade of Gaza and deliver food and medical aid. Israel's government dismissed the action as a "PR stunt" serving the Palestinian armed group Hamas, and ordered commandos to board the boats west of Cyprus on Monday and Tuesday. The detained activists were transferred to Israeli vessels and taken to an Israeli prison after arriving at the port of Ashdod. On Thursday, 422 people from 41 countries were deported by Israel. Many have since arrived home. Canadian Foreign Minister Anita Anand said on Friday that she had "received information from my officials which details the appalling abuse of Canadians who were detained in Israel", without giving further details. She added: "Canada unequivocally condemns the grave mistreatment of Canadians in Israel."

Fergie's former racehorse enjoying a retirement with beaches and beer

Sir Alex Ferguson's former champions have gone on to have varied post-sport careers, from Gary Neville's role as a pundit to Eric Cantona's Hollywood stardom. But it's a more relaxing life for one retired winner. Spirit Dancer was one of Ferguson's most successful racehorses and is now enjoying strolls on the beaches of County Donegal and even enjoying some beer each day. Instead of being put out to pasture in England after an injury, the gelding was placed in stables in Rathmullan. So how did this English-trained champion end up in Donegal? He had earned his retirement' Trainer Rachel Carton works at the stables in Rathmullan and her stepson is the top jockey Oisín Orr, who rode Spirit Dancer. Together Orr and the thoroughbred brought great success for Sir Alex and his co-owner. "Oisín rode him twice in Bahrain and he won the Bahrain International twice with him [Spirit Dancer] and Fergie, as we now affectionately call him," Carton said. She said her stepson later took up a job in England with Richard Fahey, who was training Spirit Dancer. When the horse unfortunately suffered a career-ending injury, Orr stepped in with a solution. "He sprained his fetlock joint which is the equivalent of the ankle in a human," she said. "He had his rest and his rehab and his medication, but it became obvious last autumn when he started into his training again that the joint just wasn't going to stand up to racing again. "So the decision was made that he had earned his retirement." Orr then asked if it was possible to retire him to his home stables where he learned to ride. The horse has adapted well to his new surroundings and enjoys lapping up a locally-brewed beer with his dinner. But he is only allowed a few drops each time, Carton said. She said Spirit Dancer was a "step above most horses" whose "superior character as well as ability comes through". The horse's hugely successful career included winning about $2m (£1.5m) in back-to-back successes in the Bahrain International Trophy in 2023 and 2024.

EBOLA RISK RAISED TO 'VERY HIGH' IN DR CONGO

The public health risk from the current Ebola outbreak in the Democratic Republic of Congo has been raised from "high" to "very high" by the World Health Organization (WHO). In an update on Friday, WHO head Dr Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus also said the risk in the wider region in Africa was "high", but it remained "low" globally. The rare species of Ebola, known as Bundibugyo, has no proven vaccine and kills about a third of those infected. So far, the outbreak centred on DR Congo has resulted in 177 suspected deaths and 750 suspected cases. It comes as scientists at Oxford University in the UK are developing a new vaccine that could be ready for clinical trials within two to three months. Based on the same technology they developed for the AstraZeneca Covid vaccine.

EBOLA OUTBREAK FORCES DR CONGO WORLD CUP SQUAD INTO 21-DAY ISOLATION IN BELGIUM

It is the kind of problem no football federation plans for. DR Congo spent months fighting their way to a first World Cup since 1974, only to arrive at the final weeks of preparation facing a crisis that has nothing to do with tactics, form or fitness. An Ebola outbreak back home has put their entire participation under threat, and Washington has made it clear the rules are not negotiable. What the US has told DR Congo The message from American authorities was delivered bluntly. DR Congo's squad must stay in a sealed bubble in Belgium, where they are currently based for training, and complete a full 21-day isolation period before they will be allowed to cross into the United States. Giuliani told ESPN: "We've been very clear to Congo that they should maintain the integrity of their bubble for 21 days before they can then come to Houston on June 11. We've made it very clear to the Congo government as well that they need to maintain that bubble or they risk not being able to travel to the US. We cannot be any clearer." The CDC has also announced that the US will ban entry of all foreign nationals who have been in Congo, Uganda and South Sudan within the past three weeks. That ban runs for 30 days. What is happening with the Ebola outbreak The strain at the centre of this outbreak is Bundibugyo Ebola, a rarer and particularly dangerous variant for which no approved vaccine or treatment currently exists. That detail is what makes the US position so firm. The outbreak is thought to have killed more than 130 people and caused nearly 600 suspected cases, prompting the World Health Organization to declare it a public health emergency of international concern. Earlier this week, DR Congo cancelled a three-day training camp and a planned farewell event for fans in the capital, Kinshasa, as a direct result of the situation.

"Lawsuit Is Still Going On": Frogan Reacts After Reports Claim Ethan Klein Won Copyright Lawsuit Against Her

Twitch streamer Morgan "Frogan" is finally speaking out after reports claimed that Ethan Klein had won his copyright lawsuit against her through a default judgment. The situation started blowing up online after court-related details began circulating on X on May 20, 2026. Soon after that, multiple creators and commentary pages started reacting to the news, with many people believing the legal fight was already finished. But according to Frogan herself, that's not the case at all. During a recent livestream, the streamer pushed back against the narrative that she had already lost everything. Clips from the stream quickly spread online after Drama Alert shared part of her response on X, bringing even more attention to the ongoing situation between the Twitch creator and the H3 Podcast host. Frogan says she has been dealing with the lawsuit since August. For people unfamiliar with the drama, the case reportedly involves a copyright infringement lawsuit connected to Ethan Klein. Online discussions intensified after lawyer and YouTuber Andrew "Legal Mindset" commented on the reported court update and claimed Frogan had "officially lost" the case following the default judgment filing. While reacting to the online discussions, Frogan told viewers that people were acting like the legal situation had already completely ended when, according to her, it was still active. During her stream, she repeated several times that "the lawsuit is not over" and reminded viewers that she had been dealing with the situation for months. She also mentioned that she had been fighting the lawsuit since August, clearly frustrated by how fast social media had decided the outcome. Her comments immediately became a major talking point across livestream communities, especially because many creators had already started treating the case like it was fully settled. Asmongold reacts to Frogan's comments and questions her legal response. After clips of Frogan's stream started circulating, Zack "Asmongold" also shared his thoughts on the situation. While reacting live, the streamer questioned how Frogan was supposedly fighting the lawsuit if, according to reports being discussed online, there had already been a default judgment because she allegedly did not respond properly. During his reaction, Asmongold also brought up her crowdfunding efforts and criticized some of her spending choices while the legal battle was still ongoing.

Ludwig Kaiser Arrest Update: Reports Claim WWE Star Reacted After Man Allegedly Threatened Real-Life Partner

New details are now coming out about the situation involving WWE star Ludwig Kaiser after reports claimed the incident may have started because of comments directed at his real-life partner, Andrea Bazarate. The story has quickly become a huge topic among wrestling fans online, especially after conflicting versions of what happened inside an apartment building elevator began circulating. According to recent reports shared by wrestling journalist Raj Giri, the confrontation reportedly escalated after another man allegedly threatened to "call ICE" on Bazarate during an interaction with Kaiser. That version of events is very different from what was written in the police affidavit, which mostly focused on claims made by the complainant, Richard Reap. Right now, fans are trying to piece together what exactly happened because both sides describe the altercation very differently. Reports claim Ludwig Kaiser and Andrea Bazarate were threatened in an elevator. The reported incident allegedly happened while Ludwig Kaiser and Andrea Bazarate were inside an apartment elevator together. Raj Giri stated that the couple was being affectionate, but according to him, nothing was happening that seemed extreme or unusual. Things reportedly changed once the elevator reached the 12th floor. The latest report claims Richard Reap did not say anything while inside the elevator itself. However, after stepping out, he allegedly made comments telling Kaiser to "show respect" before threatening to call ICE on Bazarate. That's reportedly when the situation became physical. The report claims Kaiser exited the elevator and got into what was described as a small scuffle with Reap. At the same time, the report also stated that no punches were allegedly thrown during the confrontation. Police affidavit tells a very different version of the alleged altercation. The police affidavit paints a much different picture of the incident. According to the document, Richard Reap claimed Kaiser and Bazarate were acting in what he described as an "uncontrollably intimate" manner while inside the elevator.

Inside SoFi Stadium: The Most Expensive Venue Hosting USA's World Cup Opening Match Against Paraguay

There are 16 stadiums hosting the 2026 FIFA World Cup. None of them cost anything close to what SoFi Stadium cost to build. Sitting in Inglewood, just a short drive from downtown Los Angeles, it is the kind of venue that stops you mid-sentence. And on the day the United States kick off their World Cup campaign against Paraguay, it will be the most-watched stadium on the planet. How much did SoFi Stadium cost, and why so much? Construction started in 2016, and when the doors finally opened in September 2020, the total cost had landed somewhere between $5 and $6 billion. That figure alone put it in a category of its own. No sports venue in history had cost that much to sheer scale. The stadium sits on 298 acres and forms the centerpiece of Hollywood Park, a full entertainment district built around it, complete with shops, offices, parks, and residential areas. This was never just a stadium. It was a city within a city, developed alongside the venue rather than bolted on later.

There was also a specific engineering challenge: because the site sits in the flight path of Los Angeles International Airport, height restrictions meant the entire stadium had to be built 30 metres below street level. That decision shaped everything from the structural design to the construction timeline. The Infinity Screen: a feature that has no real comparison. Walk into SoFi and the first thing that catches your eye is not the pitch. It is the screen above it. The Infinity Screen is the largest video board ever installed in a sports stadium. It weighs close to 100,000 kilograms and runs more than 304 metres around the interior of the roof. There is nothing else like it in world sport. Fans sitting anywhere in the bowl can see it clearly, which was the point.

BCCI Selectors Wants To 'Move On' From Struggling Suryakumar Yadav, But Final Decision With One Man: Report

Suryakumar Yadav's future as India's T20 captain could primarily be decided by head coach Gautam Gambhir, as the national selection committee is not entirely convinced that he can make it to the team purely as a batter, according to a senior BCCI source. Suryakumar, who was given the moniker SKY by Gambhir, has been struggling for form for a year now. Within the BCCI, it is understood that the selection panel is in favour of moving on from him, but the Board hierarchy also recognises that the coach-captain equation is integral to the dressing-room environment. And Gambhir's stated comfort with Suryakumar will make him a key figure in the final call. For close to a year now, Suryakumar's place in the side has remained under scrutiny. At the moment, it is understood that all five selectors largely believe that the current T20 captain should be dropped from the XI. The view has been gaining ground ever since the emotional dust of the T20 World Cup triumph settled. The selectors, it is learnt, began seeing the future of Indian cricket through a wider lens instead of focusing on the glow of a single tournament. "Initially, the selectors thought that the IPL would help Suryakumar regain form like the last edition when he crossed 700 runs. But strangely, there hasn't been any technical course correction in his game. "Even the rookie of pacers are just bowling straight hard lengths, and he has no answer. Selectors don't see him playing the Los Angeles 2028 Olympics. It is as simple as that," a senior BCCI source told PTL. The numbers do make for grim reading. Suryakumar managed only 210 runs from 12 innings at a strike rate of 148 but, more alarmingly, averaged below 18 - statistics that have sharply contrasted with the aura surrounding one of modern T20 cricket's most inventive batters.

Jasprit Bumrah Played T20 World Cup With Niggle: MI Coach Mahela Jayawardene's Revelation Ahead Of Last IPL 2026 Match

Managing a niggle that Jasprit Bumrah carried from this year's T20 World Cup into the ongoing IPL season resulted in the pace spearhead losing his "sharpness", despite Mumbai Indians giving him enough recuperation time, revealed head coach Mahela Jayawardene here on Saturday. Bumrah's reduced effectiveness meant that he has just four wickets to show from 13 games for MI, and Jayawardene said the 32-year-old was fighting that unspecified injury in the earlier part of IPL 2026. "It is due to a combination of a few things. Coming back from the (T20) World Cup, he had a slight niggle which he played with through the World Cup, so we gave him adequate rest to come back," Jayawardene told reporters on the eve of their last game in this IPL against Rajasthan Royals. In fact, MI allowed the India internationals in their line-up - Bumrah, skipper Hardik Pandya, Suryakumar Yadav and Tilak Varma - to join the pre-season camp only five days ahead of the start of this IPL on March 28. India had defended their title at Ahmedabad after an intense campaign. For Jayawardene, Bumrah's drop in pace in the earlier part of the league was because the pacer was trying to make a "gradual build-up." "In the first 4-5 games, it was a gradual build-up for him to get over that niggle he had. You could see the pace was dropped because of that, and now he's back to his pace. The last 4-5 games have been good. "But obviously when you're going through something like that, you do lose a little bit of sharpness of execution and all that because you're fighting something else. But I think health-wise, it's 100 per cent (but it is) unfortunate that the season is (now) over for us," Jayawardene said. It has been a tough season for Bumrah, who featured in four of the five matches that India played against New Zealand in a bilateral series before the T20 World Cup. Bumrah also emerged as the joint highest wicket-taker with Varun Chakravarty (14 wickets) - including a 4/15 in the final against New Zealand - while featuring in eight of the nine matches that India played in the T20 World Cup

AMID DRAGON HYPE, NEEL DROPPED SALAAR 2 BOMB!

NTR and Prashanth Neel are working together on a prestigious film titled Dragon. The film's shoot is underway, and the glimpse released yesterday sparked a mixed storm on social media. Meanwhile, there are speculations that Neel's focus is drifting away from Salaar

2 and that, post-Dragon, he will work on another standalone film. However, the director provided clarity on this in a recent interview. Prashanth Neel clarified that he will work on Salaar 2 right after the film Dragon. The issue popped up when Neel revealed that his current focus is only on Dragon, and some fans speculated that his focus was slightly drifting away. But now Neel has made it clear that Salaar 2 is on the cards and will definitely happen. Prashanth Neel worked with Prabhas for the first time among Telugu heroes. The film, in its combination, has generated huge box-office revenues. Additionally, Neel will be able to push Salaar 2 forward, but he has no clarity on when he can shift his focus back to KGF 3, as the project may take longer to materialize. At the same time, Prashanth Neel is also inclined towards writing a mythological subject, and he wants to move away from the action genre soon. Prabhas' recent outing, The Raja Saab, left his fans disappointed. More than the film's result, the trolling surrounding it caused considerable damage. However, the macho star remains unfazed and is gearing up for a strong comeback with his upcoming projects, including Kalki 2, Fauzi, and Spirit. Amid this, uncertainty continues to surround Salaar 2. There is no clear timeline for the film yet. While the producers at Hombale Films maintain that Salaar 2 is very much on track and will materialise, the bigger question remains – when will it actually begin, and when will it release? Prabhas is currently busy with Fauzi, Spirit, and Kalki 2. Given the massive scale and canvas of these films, it is expected that he may take at least 1.5 to 2 years to complete them. Meanwhile, director Prashanth Neel is also occupied with his project starring NTR. As of now, it remains uncertain when Salaar 2 will go on floors, making it a half good news and half bad news for Prabhas fans.
