YOUNGSTERS KNOW HOW TO MAKE GOVT YIELD, THANK NEW GENERATION FOR MORALE: AKHILESH

New Delhi, July 28 : Samajwadi Party (SP) chief Akhilesh Yadav on Tuesday asserted that the country's youth had demonstrated their ability to make the government respond to public demands, saying the recent student movement over examination irregularities compelled the Centre to concede several demands. Participating in the debate on the Public Examinations (Prevention of Unfair Means) Amendment Bill, 2026, in the Lok Sabha, Akhilesh Yadav, referring to the recent protests against the alleged NEET paper leak, said the government's initial approach had reflected arrogance before it eventually gave in to public pressure. "We were watching the protest. The government was arrogant in the belief that it would not bow down. After the win, youngsters raised a slogan -- 'sarkaar jhukti hai, jhukane wala chahiye' (The government yields; it just takes someone to make it yield).

Hyderabad TSIT BUREAU:

Chief Minister A. Revanth Reddy on Tuesday urged the Union Government to sanction 11,56,915 houses to Telangana under the Pradhan Mantri Awas Yojana-Gramin (PMAY-G) and sought the inclusion of additional livelihood-oriented works under the Viksit Bharat Guarantee for Rozgar and Aajivika Mission (VB-G-RAM-G) to meet local needs.

Chief Minister made the request during a meeting with Union Minister for Rural Development and Agriculture Shivraj Singh Chouhan at Krishi Bhavan in New Delhi. Revanth Reddy informed the Union Minister that the Telangana Government has accorded top priority to providing housing for the poor through the Indiramma Housing Scheme. He said the previous government had failed to effectively utilise the PMAY-G scheme, leaving lakhs of eligible rural families without permanent homes over the past decade. Chief Minister said a survey conducted using the Union Rural Development Ministry's Awaas+ app had identified 11,56,915 eligible rural beneficiaries and requested the Centre to allocate houses to Telangana at the earliest.

Highlighting the impact of El Niño conditions and deficient rainfall, Revanth Reddy urged the Centre to expand the scope of the VB-G-RAM-G scheme by including works suited to local requirements. He proposed activities such as construction of vegetable trellis structures, fodder plots, mulberry cultivation, silkworm rearing sheds, kitchen gardens, bamboo plantations, water-retention trenches, moisture conservation works for orchards and restoration of flood-damaged agricultural lands.

CM Naidu Calls for faster execution of Amaravati capital works

'Speed, Quality and Timely Delivery Must Be the Hallmarks of Every Project'

Visakhapatnam (TSIT):

Andhra Pradesh Chief Minister N. Chandrababu Naidu has directed officials and construction agencies to accelerate development works in Amaravati, stressing that all projects must be completed on schedule without compromising quality.

Reviewing the progress of capital city projects, the Chief Minister said the government is committed to ensuring speed, quality and timely delivery. He urged contractors to treat the construction of Amaravati as a prestigious opportunity and assured them of adequate financial support for smooth execution. Naidu reviewed 95 projects worth Rs.50,999 crore and instructed officials to achieve at least 7.92 per cent of the planned work every month to keep projects on track. He also called for close coordination among departments on land acquisition, funding, statutory approvals and project design to avoid delays.

The Chief Minister said Amaravati should be developed as an integrated urban region along with Vijayawada and Guntur. He also emphasised increasing green cover and adopting sustainable development practices. Naidu said he would personally monitor the progress of the projects to ensure their timely completion.

CM REVANTH'S DEFENCE OF HYDRAA SHAMEFUL: KTR

Hyderabad, July 28 : Bharat Rashtra Samithi (BRS) working president K.T. Rama Rao on Tuesday termed as "shameful" the defence of HYDRAA by Chief Minister A. Revanth Reddy even after the High Court's strong observations. He accused the Congress government of using the agency as an instrument of political intimidation, selective demolitions, and extortion rather than lawful governance. Calling upon the Chief Minister to respect the judiciary, KTR said it was shameful that Revanth Reddy continued to defend the Hyderabad Disaster Response and Asset Protection Agency (HYDRAA). "Respect the High Court. Respect democracy. A government that refuses to respect judicial institutions has no moral authority to speak about the rule of law," he said while speaking to reporters in New Delhi.

Nation wants answers on who approved use of pellet guns on protesters: Priyanka Gandhi

New Delhi (TSIT):

Congress MP Priyanka Gandhi Vadra on Tuesday said the entire nation and parents of injured students want answers on who approved the use of pellet guns and AK-47s on protesters during the agitation against exam irregularities. Participating in the debate on the Public Examinations (Prevention of Unfair Means) Amendment Bill, 2026, in the Lok Sabha, Priyanka Gandhi called for accountability of those in government.

"The students are disillusioned. Money is overshadowing merit. They want the system that is endangering their future to be improved," she said.

The students only demanded accountability and removal of those who were responsible for irregularities, but they were met with the use of force, she said, referring to the alleged NEET paper leak. "The examination system has itself failed. Over 750 crore students have been hit by 152 paper leaks in the last decade but not a single mafia was punished," said Priyanka Gandhi, alleging that the government has weakened the sectors that have potential to generate jobs.

To restore the faith of the youth in the decayed system, drastic steps need to be taken, and efforts like PR and narrative change will fail, she said, expressing concern over the 'rousing welcome' given to the former Education Minister Dharmendra Pradhan on Parliament premises with in days of his resignation.

She earlier narrated the anger and frustration of the mother of a girl who was injured in police action during the students' protests.

Youngsters know how to make govt yield, thank new generation for morale: Akhilesh Yadav

New Delhi, July 28 : Samajwadi Party (SP) chief Akhilesh Yadav on Tuesday asserted that the country's youth had demonstrated their ability to make the government respond to public demands, saying the recent student movement over examination irregularities compelled the Centre to concede several demands. Participating in the debate on the Public Examinations (Prevention of Unfair Means) Amendment Bill, 2026, in the Lok Sabha, Akhilesh Yadav, referring to the recent protests against the alleged NEET paper leak, said the government's initial approach had reflected arrogance before it eventually gave in to public pressure.

"We were watching the protest. The government was arrogant in the belief that it would not bow down. After the win, youngsters raised a slogan -- 'sarkaar jhukti hai, jhukane wala chahiye' (The government yields; it just takes someone to make it yield). The youngsters know how to make the government yield," he said. He claimed the Centre had eventually accepted several demands raised by the protesters, including the resignation of the then Union Education Minister Dharmendra Pradhan, but questioned why those commitments had not been formally placed before the Parliament. "The government had to bow down, and they agreed to make the Minister resign. The government has agreed to several points (presented by the protesters), but we don't know why it is not presenting it before the House," he said.

On the reception accorded to Pradhan in the Parliament after his resignation, the SP chief said his party had no objection to the welcome but remarked that the resignation had shifted attention away from larger issues.

"However, how relieved he must be when he got to know what kind of a problem he diverted. They removed a Pradhan to save Pradhan Mantri," he quipped. Congratulating the younger generation, particularly Gen Z, Akhilesh Yadav said the students' unity and determination had succeeded where, according to him, the government's political campaigns had failed. "Who knows how many crores they (the government) spent on their negative politics. However, I would like to thank the new generation for their morale and unity; the way they campaigned, the government had to bow down," he said.

He further expressed hope that the government would implement all the demands raised by the protesting students. Referring to the Cockroach Janata Party (CJP), which spearheaded the protests, Akhilesh Yadav said the movement, despite beginning as a satirical campaign, evolved into a serious nationwide agitation that compelled the government to permit demonstrations. "The movement, which started as a 'joke', became so serious that the government became democratic and allowed them to sit on dharna."

Drawing parallels with earlier protests, the Kannauj MP recalled the farmers' agita-and clarify." The Samajwadi Party chief also referred to the alleged theft of donations at the Ram Temple and questioned the government's ability to prevent examination paper leaks.

"How can those who couldn't protect temple donations stop paper leaks?" he asked. He further pointed out that examination papers had allegedly been leaked even in Uttar Pradesh, the Prime Minister's home state in electoral terms. "A big state like UP, from where the Prime Minister gets elected, even there, the paper is leaking," he said. Akhilesh Yadav also questioned the government's decision to outsource functions of the National Testing Agency (NTA), expressing concern over accountability in the examination system.

"I hope you have not mistaken 'accountability' as the ability to fill accounts," he said. "The Opposition is afraid that the whole government will soon be outsourced. The organisation that must be most trustworthy are also being outsourced," he added. The SP President also criticised the BJP government over the closure of primary schools, claiming that more than one lakh schools had been shut across the country, including 26,300 in Uttar Pradesh. He also questioned why examination papers for Classes 10 and 12 continued to be leaked despite existing laws. In conclusion, Akhilesh Yadav compared the police action during the recent student protests in Delhi with the Emergency, alleging that the use of tear gas and force against demonstrators reflected a similar atmosphere of suppression. "I have not seen the Emergency, but Delhi witnessed similar injustice during the recent protests," he said.

Sircilla (TSIT): State Agriculture and Marketing Minister Thummala Nageswara Rao has advised farmers to cultivate dryland and horticultural crops instead of paddy considering the prevailing weather conditions and declining water availability. Participating in the 100th episode of "Rythu Nestham" through video conference from Hyderabad, the Minister interacted with farmers and agriculture officials. He said technolo-

A comprehensive review was conducted on the development programs undertaken by various departments in the 23 village panchayats under Julurupadu mandal, the implementation of government welfare schemes, the formulation of comprehensive development plans of village panchayats, and future activities. The steps to be taken for the development of villages and the goals to be achieved were discussed extensively with the mandal level officials and sarpanches. a rainfall deficit of about 40 millimeters in the district. He said that although there has been more than normal rainfall in the last four years, the conditions are different this year. He said that after almost 25 years, conditions such as high temperatures and increased heat content in the air are being seen due to the El Nino effect.

Keeping these conditions in mind, he said that the departments of agriculture, irrigation, animal husbandry, education and other departments are preparing action plans in coordination. He revealed that after extensive discussions in the two-day mandal level meetings, an action plan will be prepared to effectively deal with the impact of El Nino in the coming year. He said that in the last season, along with paddy, maize cultivation was also done in large quantities, and about 42 thousand metric tons of paddy and 70 thousand metric tons of maize were purchased. He suggested that farmers should focus on cultivating oil palm, maize, pulses and other wet crops as an alternative to paddy. He said that farmers have the opportunity to get a stable income for about 25 years through oil palm cultivation. He also directed that the cultivation of crops that have high demand in the market such as cotton and vegetables should be encouraged, and that the agriculture department officials should organize awareness programs for farmers at the field level.

There is a line doing the rounds on Reddit: “The underlying purpose of AI is to allow wealth to access skill while removing from the skilled the ability to access wealth.” Advertisement - Scroll to continue It sounds like dystopian exaggeration. Then you realise that every sentence an AI writes, every line of code it generates and every document it analyses is already counted and billed in tokens. A writer's instinct, a coder's logic, a lawyer's drafting and an artist's imagination are being converted into cheap, reproducible units of machine work. The human spent years acquiring the skill. The model absorbed its patterns, while the platform acquired the ability to reproduce parts of the work whenever a customer was willing to pay. Capital no longer always needs to hire the person. Increasingly, it can simply pay for the tokens. That is the real AI revolution hiding behind the friendly chatbot. Human expertise is not merely being automated. It is being tokenised, priced and rented back to the economy by companies that control the infrastructure on which this new form of work runs. So perhaps “Will AI replace humans?” was never the right question. The more disturbing one is: Who owns the meter on human skill? Skills, Now Priced Per Token Behind the reassuring language of copilots and assistants, AI has a brutally simple economic grammar. Every action a model performs, including reading, writing, coding, analysing, reasoning or generating an image, consumes tokens. These are small pieces of data processed by the system, and each of them can be counted and priced. Deloitte calls the token “the fundamental unit of AI work”. Its 2026 analysis argues that the economics of AI increasingly revolve around tokens rather than software licences, processors or server capacity. For companies, the critical calculation is fast becoming how efficiently tokens can be converted into revenue, productivity or lower costs. That may sound like a technical change, but it is also a redefinition of labour. A company once hired a content team, a software unit or a group of junior analysts. It paid salaries in exchange for time and expertise. Now, parts of the same work can be summoned through an application programming interface and charged according to consumption. The company no longer needs to employ every person whose skill contributed to the output. It can rent a machine-generated approximation whenever required. A copywriter's instincts become text generation, a programmer's experience becomes code completion, a lawyer's drafting becomes document automation and an illustrator's eye becomes image generation. The work does not vanish, but the relationship between the work and the worker begins to fray. AI Does Not Need To Replace You The debate around AI and employment is usually framed in absolute terms.

Gen Z Can Topple A Minister. Why Can't They Enter Parliament?

Dharmendra Pradhan's resignation carries an irony that Delhi's political durbars should not miss. A politician whose ascent began in student politics has been forced out of the Education Ministry by students who had no party office, no famous surname, or invitation to the national high table. The Cockroach Janta Party (CJP) converted an insult into an identity and an examination scandal into a larger argument about fairness. The ruling NDA government first treated the agitation as a policing problem. It then negotiated, conceded the protesters' principal demands, and accepted Pradhan's resignation. Pralhad Joshi, another senior Cabinet hand, has been given additional charge of Education. The resignation matters. But India must understand the larger message: young people should not have to besiege Parliament to be heard inside it. Telangana Chief Minister A. Revanth Reddy put the argument in memorable political shorthand: India's youth should not merely march from Jantar Mantar towards Parliament; they should be enabled to move from sadak se Sansad, that is, from the street into the legislature itself. Not Yet A Generational Transfer The immediate official response has been administrative continuity: one veteran replaces another, at least temporarily. Yet the crisis was not merely about who occupied Shastri Bhawan. It was about the distance between those designing India's education system and those living through its examinations, coaching factories, paper leaks, delayed recruitment, and precarious passage from degree to employment. The next full-time Education Minister should, therefore, be chosen with more imagination. So should the next minister responsible for information technology. These ministries govern the terrain on which Gen Z lives: education, artificial intelligence, data, online speech, platform work, skills, and employment. In fact, many in the Congress and the INDIA alliance are now suggesting that a future Opposition-led government should entrust the education portfolio to a Gen Z leader. Young Country, Old House India possesses the world's largest Gen Z cohort. More than 500 million Indians, roughly 35% of the population, are between 10 and 29. Yet, only four members elected to the present Lok Sabha were identified as Gen Z. That is less than one per cent of a House whose average age is 56 and which is among the oldest Lok Sabhas India has elected. The mismatch is not cosmetic. Representation influences what receives urgency. India permits a citizen to vote at 18 but requires that person to wait until 25 to contest for the Lok Sabha or an Assembly, and until 30 for the Rajya Sabha or a Legislative Council. The argument is older than the Republic. In the Constituent Assembly, Shibban Lal Saxena had warned against excluding exceptional young Indians, while BR Ambedkar defended higher age requirements, particularly for the Upper House. The founders made their judgment in the conditions of 1949. But does respect for their wisdom does not require every threshold to remain frozen for eternity? The world, after all, has evolved. Singapore permits citizens aged 21 to contest parliamentary elections. Since its Prime Minister must command a parliamentary majority, a 21-year-old is theoretically eligible for the office. Singapore has not had a 21-year-old prime minister, but the relevant point is simple: its law does not declare political adulthood to end at the voting booth. The Indian contradiction is difficult to defend indefinitely. A citizen can vote at 18, graduate soon afterwards, sit for the civil services at 21 and, in exceptional cases, acquire substantial administrative responsibility before becoming legally eligible to contest an Assembly or Lok Sabha election. The Republic is willing to trust a 21-year-old with the machinery of the state, but not yet with the possibility of securing a popular mandate. Can Parliament Act? Reddy has repeatedly proposed lowering the minimum age for contesting assembly elections from 25 to 21 and has spoken of an Assembly resolution urging a constitutional amendment. Telangana cannot make this change alone: Articles 84 and 173 prescribe the qualifications, so Parliament must act. But a state government can create the political pressure that makes Parliament act. Reddy has announced that a special session of the Telangana Legislative Assembly and Legislative Council will be convened in the first week of August to adopt a resolution seeking 21 as the minimum age for contesting the Lok Sabha and State Assemblies, and 25 for the Rajya Sabha and Legislative Councils. The resolution is to be forwarded to Prime Minister Narendra Modi and the Union government. The proposal retains a distinction between the directly elected Houses and the Upper Houses, while lowering both thresholds. It is more considered than a blanket demand to abolish every age qualification. The argument draws deliberately on Rajiv Gandhi's decision to lower the voting age from 21 to 18 through the 61st Constitutional Amendment. The amendment's statement of objects argued that politically conscious young people should be allowed to become part of the political process. Another Congress-era precedent comes to mind. Under PV Narasimha Rao, the eligibility age for offices in urban and rural local bodies, including mayoral and Zilla Parishad leadership positions, was lowered from 25 to 21. This helped create space for very young representatives in local government, including the election of a 21-year-old mayor in Thiruvananthapuram. younger candidates later. The unfinished step lies in Parliament and the assemblies. But parties need not wait for a constitutional amendment. They can commit a meaningful share of tickets in every state to candidates below 35. They can open district and state organisations to credible internal elections, and place young legislators in portfolios with real authority rather than confining them to youth affairs, sports, and ceremonial responsibilities. Open The Gates, Not Merely The Gallery Lowering the candidacy age to 21 would be a start, not a cure. Indian politics is expensive, dynastic, and organisationally closed. Without changes in campaign finance, internal party democracy, and candidate selection, lowering the threshold may simply allow younger members of established political families to enter four years earlier. A youthful surname is not a youth revolution. Nor should the CJP be romanticised. A successful protest is not automatically a programme for governance. Virality is not organisation, and irreverence is not ideology. Young politics can be intolerant, impulsive, and vulnerable to manipulation, just as old politics can be cynical and complacent. The answer is not to hand the Republic to one generation. It is to stop excluding that generation from meaningful power. Political parties should publish the age profile of their candidates, set measurable youth targets for tickets, and finance first-generation entrants who do not possess family wealth or an inherited constituency. Legislative fellowships should lead somewhere more consequential than research assistance.

When will non-BJP governments be held accountable for paper leaks?

Competitive exams in India are not just a means of employment, but also the dreams of millions of youth, the hopes of families, and the foundation of social justice. Any exam is considered meaningful only when it respects talent, hard work, and fairness. But when a question paper is leaked, not just one exam is affected, but the credibility of the entire system is questioned. Unfortunately, the first response to such incidents in the country is not a solution, but rather a political one. A cycle of blame and counter-allegations ensues, and the future of students becomes a subject of political debate. In the past few years, incidents of paper leaks have surfaced in many states across the country. Some affected teacher recruitment exams, others police recruitment exams, some Public Service Commission exams, and other competitive exams. These incidents have made it clear that paper leaks are not a problem limited to a single state, a single party, or a single examination body. It challenges the entire examination system. Yet, political parties present this issue according to their own interests. When irregularities occur in a national-level examination, the opposition holds the central government and the concerned minister accountable, demanding their resignation. This is a natural part of democracy. It is the opposition's duty to demand answers from the government. But this question becomes even more important when repeated incidents of paper leaks occur in non-BJP-ruled states. The same political parties that advocate for morality and accountability at the center often dismiss these as mere administrative lapses. This is where the debate about double standards begins. Morality in a democracy doesn't mean it applies only to the opposition. If demanding the resignation of a government is justified, then the same criteria should apply equally to every government. Accountability cannot be determined by party. If a paper leak in a BJP-ruled state is a government failure, how does the same incident become solely the fault of officials in non-BJP governments? If a minister's resignation is demanded in one place, why is the same demand considered inappropriate in another? In fact, the bar for morality in Indian politics often shifts between power and opposition. While in opposition, every party espouses the highest standards of accountability, but upon coming to power, the same party begins citing investigations, procedures, and administrative reasons. This trend is not limited to any one political party. Almost all parties have fallen victim to this political expediency from time to time. Therefore, the problem lies not with any particular party, but with political culture. However, it is equally true that the opposition's responsibility is not only to raise questions but also to set a better example during its rule. If a party demands the resignation of BJP governments, it should adopt the same ethical standards in its own states. Democracy builds credibility only when principles do not change with the change of power. The biggest loss from a paper leak is to the student who has worked hard for years. Thousands and even lakhs of rupees are spent on coaching, books, application fees, and accommodation. Families cut back on their own needs to invest in their children's education. Cancellation of an exam not only means a new date, but also mental stress, financial loss, and deep uncertainty about the future. Sometimes, students face the risk of overstaying their age limit. In such a situation, statements from political parties cannot heal the wounds of students. Paper leak incidents also demonstrate that simply enacting laws is not enough. If deficiencies persist in question paper storage, printing, transportation, digital security, and monitoring of examination centers, criminals will find new ways to commit them. Therefore, robust technical systems, transparent processes, and timely investigations are essential. The perpetrators must face swift and severe punishment so that no one dares to commit such crimes in the future. Along with this, accountability must be established at the highest level. This does not mean that immediate resignation is the only solution for every incident. However, if papers are continuously leaked in a department, if security systems repeatedly fail, and if serious oversight negligence is revealed, the moral responsibility of the minister and top officials cannot be denied. High office confers not only authority but also greater responsibility. This question arises in the context of non-BJP governments because political discourse often highlights incidents in BJP-ruled states, while similar incidents in other states receive relatively little discussion. If the principle of equality is accepted in democracy, then there should be equal discussion and accountability. The public does not care about the party in power; it cares about whether the future of its children is secure. The role of the media is also crucial in this context. If the media presents events solely from a political perspective, the real problem will be overlooked. Journalism's responsibility is to uncover the facts, monitor the direction of investigations, and give prominence to student voices. The media must question both the ruling party and the opposition with equal rigor. This is the very essence of democracy. Social media has also added a new dimension to this debate. Political propaganda often overshadows facts. Supporters defend their respective parties and blame their opponents. As a result, even discussions on serious issues like paper leaks devolve into political polarization rather than solutions. This further undermines student confidence. The need of the hour is to completely modernize the examination system. Systems such as digital encryption of question papers, secure distribution, artificial intelligence-based monitoring, scientific selection of examination centers, and independent audits should be strengthened.

One Crisis, 4 Wins: How China Might Just Have Hit A Geopolitical Jackpot

There is now a near-unanimous consensus that the Iran war has benefited China immensely. Against the sniggering commentaries of the initial days of the war, when it was believed that China would be hit hard, the more recent reports on how it has impacted China are far more sobering, if not outright envious. But China can hardly be blamed for accruing benefits from the shortsighted, ill-thought-out war. There are four broad areas in which China is reportedly benefiting. A Distracted America The first is military. The ongoing Iran war is being perceived as a gamechanger in the Indo-Pacific security architecture as the US continues to pivot to the Middle East, pulling out missile systems, long-range missiles, and interceptors from places like South Korea and Pacific Islands and transferring them to the Middle East to replenish depleting stockpiles there. This leaves China with greater military clout in the region and also helps it mount a narrative - especially around Taiwan - about the unreliability of the US as an ally. The war also helps China study American war manoeuvres, strike patterns, weapons systems, operational capabilities, etc., which are useful for any potential future conflict over Taiwan or in the Indo-Pacific. It's The Oil, Silly Secondly, the closure of the Strait of Hormuz early into the war and the destruction of energy facilities have caused disruptions in energy supply chains on a scale hitherto un witnessed. About 25% of crude oil and a fifth of LNG have disappeared from global energy markets. This has benefited China in two ways. One, the energy shortfall has accelerated the push for renewables. Countries such as Pakistan and Vietnam have increased the deployment of renewable energy and the use of electric vehicles. China is the largest manufacturer of electric vehicles, solar panels, and wind turbines, and is leading global clean energy chains, with exports soaring to $21.9 billion just by March 2026. On the other hand, China has judiciously engaged in building massive strategic energy reserves. Over the years, it has sourced sanctioned Iranian oil at massively discounted prices, especially after the 2021 agreement with Iran for an estimated $400 billion, which has been a lifeline for Iran, more so after the war began and a blockade was imposed on the country's ports. According to data from the US Energy Information Administration (EIA), China holds an estimated 1.2 to 1.4 billion barrels of total crude oil in combined commercial and strategic stockpiles. With decreasing demand and sustained pipeline LNG supplies, Chinese firms have been reselling LNG to countries facing severe shortfalls because of the war, like Vietnam, South Korea and the Philippines. Both these things increase China's strategic leverage regionally and globally. The Age Of The Yuan A third reason, and one tied to the above, is the process of de-dollarisation and the promotion of the Chinese yuan. This process has been underway for a while now and is projected to only accelerate. Just like the sanctions on Russia accelerated the use of the yuan in Sino-Russian trade, so did the sanctions on Iran facilitate the use of the Chinese currency in settling cross-border trade. Sanctions aside, other countries, too, have tried to hedge their exposure. For instance, in 2023, China and Saudi Arabia signed a local currency swap agreement worth $7 billion as part of efforts to boost trade using their currencies and reduce reliance on the dollar. In 2024, Saudi Arabia signed on to the mBridge project, launched in 2021 between the central banks of China, Hong Kong, Thailand, and the UAE, to develop a new system for cross-border payments using central bank digital currencies. India, too, paid in yuan for Russian oil shipments earlier and for Iranian crude this year under a US sanctions waiver. Given how tied the Iranian economy is to China's, and in order to deliberately undermine the US dollar, Iran also announced that it would collect shipping "tolls" for passage through the Strait of Hormuz in yuan. China's Cross-Border Interbank Payment System (CIPS) has reportedly seen daily transactions increase by over 50%, from $85 billion to $130 billion during the war. Pulling Its Diplomatic Weight Fourthly, the Iran war has seen China's diplomatic clout increase. In any case, much of the Global South, at least Africa and the Middle East, sees China as a natural leader and the only alternative to the US. The Iran war has helped project and promote that image. The war began on February 28, 2026. Soon after, China's Special Envoy to the Middle East, Zhai Jun, began engaging in shuttle diplomacy in the region to facilitate mediation and advance de-escalation efforts. This was just what Li Hui, the Chinese government's special representative for Eurasian affairs, had done during the Russia-Ukraine war. While nothing changed on the ground in the latter case, it did project and promote China's image as a peace-loving and peace-seeking country. China has also opposed a UNSC resolution to open the Strait of Hormuz.

Chipmakers In Freefall: SanDisk, AMD, ASML, Micron Slip Up To 12% On China DUV Challenge

The semiconductor and chipmaker rout has deepened on Tuesday, with major American players like Micron Technology Inc., Nvidia Corp., Advanced Micro Devices Inc., Sandisk Corp., and ASML Holding N.V. falling up to 10% at open. Traders have been dumping chip stocks ever since China announced that it has begun manufacturing its own immersion deep ultra-violet (DUV) lithography machines. The breakthrough directly impacts Dutch firm ASML's near-monopoly over critical chipmaking technology. ASML's stock traded 5% lower at $1,566.35. Memory giant Sandisk was hit the hardest, and dived 11.5% to a low of $1,128.36 within minutes of the Wall Street opening bell. Micron plunged over 8.6% to a low of $817.02, AMD traded 8.2% lower at $452.54. Intel Corp slid over 6% to a low of $85.75, Qualcomm Inc. was down 4% to $164.10. Nvidia Corp. was somewhat insulated compared to other semi peers, but still fell 2% to $193.57. American Depository Receipts (ADRs) of newly-listed Korean giant SK Hynix fell 9% to $130.54. The ADRs have fallen nearly 24% in just the last 5 days. China's jolt came at an already volatile time for AI-linked semiconductor companies and chipmakers, with investors engaging in frequent selloffs over concerns regarding sky-high valuations, AI revenue. China Threat: Explained Chipmaking relies on lithography machines that use precisely focused light to etch microscopic circuits onto silicon wafers. Therefore, China's announcement triggered a sharp selloff of semis across global chip equipment stocks with ASML shares sinking more than 7% on Monday — its worst day since June 8.

RUPEE RISES 35 PAISE TO 95.64 AGAINST US DOLLAR IN EARLY TRADE

Mumbai: The rupee extended its upward momentum, rising 35 paise to 95.64 against the US dollar in early trade on Tuesday, July 28, driven by lower crude oil prices amid easing geopolitical tensions. Forex traders said a weak US dollar index and positive equity market sentiment further boosted the Indian currency. At the interbank foreign exchange, the rupee opened at 95.75 and gained further to trade at 95.64 against the greenback, up 35 paise from its previous closing level. The rupee appreciated sharply by 54 paise to close at 95.99 against the US dollar on Monday, after rising 20 paise in the preceding session on Friday. Meanwhile, the dollar index, which gauges the greenback's strength against a basket of six currencies, was trading down 0.06 per cent at 101.31.

Brent crude, the global oil benchmark, was trading 1.43 per cent lower at USD 87.10 per barrel in futures trade. Analysts said oil prices eased as the US and Iran refrained from attacking each other's targets for the third consecutive day and mediators achieved progress in getting both sides back to negotiations. US President Donald Trump said Iran had asked for more discussions, reaching out directly "because we've been hitting them very hard." Iran has said there are no direct talks underway. On the domestic equity market front, Sensex rose 14.66 points, or 0.02 per cent, to 76,850.44, while the Nifty was up 27.10 points, or 0.11 per cent, to 24,023.45. Foreign Institutional Investors offloaded equities worth Rs 1,688.23 crore on a net basis on Monday, according to exchange data. Analysts said oil prices eased as tensions in West Asia appeared to moderate, with the United States and Iran refraining from attacking each other's targets for a third consecutive day. Market sentiment was also supported by reports that diplomatic efforts had made progress towards bringing both sides back to negotiations. US President Donald Trump said Iran had sought further discussions, claiming it had reached out directly after sustained US strikes. Tehran, however, denied that any direct talks were currently taking place. Domestic equity markets also traded in positive territory during early deals. The BSE Sensex gained 14.66 points, or 0.02 per cent, to 76,850.44, while the NSE Nifty rose 27.10 points, or 0.11 per cent, to 24,023.45. Despite the rupee's strength, foreign institutional investors (FIIs) remained net sellers, offloading equities worth Rs 1,688.23 crore on Monday, according to exchange data. The Indian currency opened at 95.75 in the interbank foreign exchange market before strengthening further to 95.64 against the greenback. The rally follows Monday's sharp 54-paise gain, after the rupee had also advanced 20 paise in the previous trading session. Foreign exchange traders attributed the rupee's continued recovery to declining global oil prices, a weaker dollar index and improved investor sentiment in Indian equities.

The US dollar index, which measures the greenback against a basket of six major currencies, was trading 0.06 per cent lower at 101.31. Global crude prices also remained under pressure, with Brent crude futures falling 1.43 per cent to USD 87.10 a barrel.

HONG KONG ACTIVIST ALLOWED TO STAY IN UK AFTER DEPORTATION THREAT

Former Hong Kong opposition leader Wu Chi-wai has been allowed to stay in the UK with his family for six months, after initially being detained at the border. Wu had arrived at London's Heathrow Airport last Wednesday, where he was detained for nearly 10 hours and initially refused entry, he told BBC Chinese. He said he was later told he could stay for only one week, after which he would have to report to the airport to be deported. But on Monday, the UK Border Force approved his entry and granted him a standard stay of six months, he said. The 63-year-old was the leader of the now-defunct Democratic Party and one of the most recognisable faces of the city's quashed pro-democracy movement. Wu is one of the so-called Hong Kong 47, a group of high-profile pro-democracy leaders who were sentenced to jail after a controversial national security trial. He was released in June after spending more than five years in prison for subversion and other convictions. Wu told BBC Chinese that his son and wife moved to the UK in 2022 and 2023, and the only communication he had with them since then was through monthly phone calls and letters. He had hoped to reunite with his family in the UK during his recent visit, he added. Ahead of his departure, Wu said he had consulted staff at the British Consulate General in Hong Kong, asking if there would be any problems with his entry. "The information I received was that there would be none," he said, adding that consular staff said they would explain his criminal record and itinerary to the UK Border Force. The Border Force said he was not considered a "genuine visitor" who was solely visiting family, he said. Wu denies that he had intended to apply for political asylum in the UK - a claim that was previously reported in the media. Rights group Hong Kong Watch, which had called on UK authorities to allow Wu to stay in the country, said in a statement that it welcomed the recent news.

'IT'S A HELL OF A SITUATION': SPAIN GRAPPLES WITH DEVASTATING WILDFIRES

For the past week, firefighters have been tackling a series of wildfires ravaging the Spanish countryside, threatening dozens of communities and forcing more than 70,000 people to evacuate their homes. Three fires in the Madrid region have caused special concerns, with a new heatwave expected to hit Spain from Wednesday, fuelling fears that firefighting efforts could be hindered. "It's a hell of a situation," said Madrid regional leader Isabel Díaz Ayuso, as she visited affected areas on Monday alongside Prime Minister Pedro Sánchez. Sánchez spoke on Tuesday of highly challenging hours and days ahead but of light beginning to appear "at the end of the tunnel". Temperatures are expected to approach 40C in some regions in the coming days, with the heatwave forecast to last at least until Sunday. Spain's state meteorological agency Aemet has warned the "fire danger level will continue to rise to extreme levels, hindering firefighting efforts". Ayuso confirmed that four municipalities remained under lockdown orders while another 12 were evacuated. She had earlier described the wildfires as "the biggest natural catastrophe in the history of Spain" and of flames turning the area into a "war zone". In the Madrid region alone, more than 56,500 people have been evacuated since the fires broke out last week. A further 27,797 people have been ordered to stay at home. Further evacuations have taken place in Ávila, Toledo and Valencia. Ayuso wrote on X that the situation was now "improving little by little" and some residents may soon be allowed to return home. Interior Minister Fernando Grande-Marlaska told Spain's La 1 TV channel that firefighting efforts on Monday night had resulted in "relatively positive progress". "This morning, we are very satisfied with the work done. We are going to consolidate the work that has been done," he said. He maintained that "we must be positive; we have the emergency under control" but conceded that "weather conditions are not helping us at all". "The climate emergency is worsening year after year, and we are required to be united to fight against fire, as well as in prevention and reconstruction," he told reporters during a briefing in Madrid.

ON THE FRONT LINE OF ECUADOR'S DRUGS WAR, POLICE FIGHT GANGS, GUNS AND CORRUPTION

=In the Ecuadorian city of Durán, riddled with drugs and rival gangs, Police Captain Jean Carlos Bustamante knows exactly what he is up against – not just the criminals who kill and sometimes dismember their rivals, but also the enemy within. "We have many, many bad people inside our unit, inside the state, inside politics," he says. "We have many, many guys that are corrupt. They are in the pay of the gangs." The only police officers he can trust, he says, are the ones right beside him - members of his hand-picked team. At 34, Captain Bustamante is the oldest among them and moves like the special forces officer he used to be. With the sun setting, he leads his team into a hardscrabble neighbourhood where windows are sealed off behind metal grills, and lips are sealed by fear. This is the heart of gangland, controlled by a group called Los Aguilas (Spanish for The Eagles). I ask what happens if local people speak out against the gangs. "They kill them," the captain replies. "So that's why they never say nothing." He's heading for an abandoned house where he believes weapons have been hidden (gunmen don't keep their guns at home). He and his team line up, hugging the wall, heavily armed, and tightly packed. A battering ram gets them through the door. They find two handguns – one rusty but the other ready to be fired - and ammunition for an assault rifle. The captain says he's happy with the result. "The first reason is because we are safe," he says. "The second is that there are two guns less for the gangs." But this is a small victory, in a war of attrition. He admits the gangs have "many weapons and much more money than the state". He knows the risks only too well – having lost three close friends fighting the gangs. He has also lost his fear he says, "years ago", but his parents have not. "My mum says be careful, maybe you can die there," he tells me. "My dad calls all the time and asks 'my son, are you good? Tell me that you are good.'" A line can be traced - in dollars and in broken lives - from the back streets of Durán to the hotspots of London, and other capital cities. Around 70% of the cocaine reaching Europe and the US is funnelled out of Ecuador, according to the country's President, Daniel Noboa.

Gironde wildfires pick up as French region braces for new 40C heatwave

Firefighters in France are working around the clock to contain wildfires that have been raging in the Gironde region, while bracing for another sharp rise in temperatures. "The fire is like David against Goliath," said Eric Brocardi, spokesman of the national firefighters' federation. Four of his colleagues had died in recent weeks across France, he said, and 2,000 had been deployed in the Gironde to contain the flames, which for days have ravaged the countryside between the coastline and Bordeaux. "Weather conditions were unfavourable," a local official warned, as this summer's fourth heatwave was expected to start by Wednesday, bringing temperatures in the area to 40C. Bordeaux, which has a population of 260,000, is not currently under threat, according to officials. But Commander Rémi Lassourelle, who is leading the firefighting response in the Gironde region, is worried about the western edge of the wildfire. "We are frightened about the impact on Bordeaux and the metropolitan area," he said. One of the wildfires burning on Monday was 15km (9 miles) from the periphery of Bordeaux, where the air quality has deteriorated dramatically in recent days. "By Sunday evening everything had really begun to empty out," a holidaymaker from Essex told the BBC, adding that the air was "really smoky" with bits of ash. "People were staying indoors, so it was eerie, and very sad." The majority of residents and tourists were wearing masks and the smell of smoke clung on to clothes for days, she said. A firefighter "got a round of applause" as he walked through the Marché Chartrons square in Bordeaux where restaurants were having to close their doors because of the ash in the air, she added. "The city has been very quiet," said Graham White, president of the Bordeaux British Community. "The shops, restaurants and cafes are fairly empty... Interestingly on Sunday when there was still smoke, there were people brave enough to sit outside on terraces." White, who has been living in the area for several years, said this sort of event had not occurred before and was "something significant". But some news reports had suggested the situation in Bordeaux was "akin to being the next Great Fire of London", which was not the case, White added. President Emmanuel Macron, who visited the fire-ravaged area in the Gironde region on Monday, said the country was facing a "completely unprecedented wildfire... the 'toughest since World War Two'. Health Minister Stéphanie Rist said the government was being "very vigilant" in terms of air pollution and urged people in the affected areas to stay indoors. On Tuesday morning the Gironde prefect ordered a new evacuation of all camping sites near the coast at Lacanau, while those in the nearby town were allowed to stay put but told to prepare for sudden evacuation. About 4,000 tourists told to leave the area are in addition to the 220,000 people evacuated around France in recent days. An estimated 240 homes and houses have been destroyed, officials have said. By midday on Tuesday firefighters were already intervening in various parts of the region to tackle fires that were picking up again. A 23-year-old man was arrested on suspicion of starting a fire in the Var region.

'A narcissist': Victim's family hits out at Kohberger for challenging murder conviction

The family of one of the victims of Bryan Kohberger has hit out after it emerged that he was challenging his conviction for four murders of students in the US state of Idaho. Kohberger was sentenced last year to four consecutive terms of life in prison after pleading guilty to charges of murder in the November 2022 killings. In recent days, Kohberger told the New York Times he was taking back his plea, which was made to avoid the death penalty. He said it had rested on "false promises and blatant disinformation". The family of Kaylee Goncalves, one of the students who was killed, said that Kohberger was a "narcissist" who appeared to have changed his position. "He chose not to leave his fate - or the facts of the case - to a jury," their statement from the Goncalves family said. "He never cried foul, never claimed he was uninformed or pressured, and never suggested there were problems with the discovery materials he and his counsel had reviewed for two years that should have been challenged." The Goncalves family went on to say "the real tragedy" was the amount of attention that Kohberger was now receiving at the expense of the victims.

ZELENSKY TO PRESS TRUMP ON AIR DEFENCES WHILE IN WASHINGTON

Ukraine's Volodymyr Zelensky is due to hold important talks with US President Donald Trump at the White House, where he is hoping to firm up commitments to bolstering Kyiv's anti-ballistic missile defences. Zelensky has arrived in the US at a significant stage in Russia's full-scale war in Ukraine, with Moscow's mayor saying the capital was targeted by 390 drones in a matter of hours overnight. The Ukrainian leader is expected to press Trump over support he gave earlier this month for Kyiv to be given a licence to produce Patriot interceptor missiles. Russia has escalated deadly ballistic missile attacks on Ukraine's capital recently, and Zelensky has said interceptors are urgently needed. Patriot missiles have been at the top of Zelensky's wish-list for some time, but after the wars in Ukraine and the Middle East, these US air defence interceptors are in very short supply. Promising a licence is one thing, but co-producing the highly sophisticated PAC-2 and PAC-3 interceptors on Ukrainian soil is another, because it involves a lengthy political, legal and technical process. A delegation from US manufacturer Raytheon visited Kyiv last week and Zelensky said the defence firm had expressed "readiness to take our partnership to an even higher level". After he speaks with Zelensky, Trump will have another important meeting with Israel's Benjamin Netanyahu. It is the first time the two have met in person since the war on Iran started in late February. Zelensky and Netanyahu are in Washington to attend the funeral of Senator Lindsey Graham, who died this month aged 71. The Ukraine war appeared to coincide with the US-Israel war with Iran at the weekend, when Ukrainian forces targeted an Iranian cargo ship in the Caspian Sea. Kyiv has described Iran as a "direct accomplice to Russian aggression against Ukraine" and Zelensky has said Ukrainian intelligence has evidence that Russia has shared satellite imagery with Tehran, enabling Iran to attack US military facilities and Gulf states. Trump has said he will "find out if that's true. I'll ask Putin about it", while saying if true, it had no impact at all.

NOVAK DJOKOVIC, ARYNA SABALENKA TEAM UP FOR ALL-STAR US OPEN MIXED DOUBLES PAIRING

Serbian tennis legend Novak Djokovic and women's number one Aryna Sabalenka top the list of pairings entered for the US Open mixed doubles. However, both men's world number one Jannik Sinner and second-ranked Carlos Alcaraz have not entered the competition which was heavily revamped last year. Reforms featured a shorter scoring format in the earlier rounds and a new scheduling slot -- played over two days -- before the singles draws in an attempt to encourage the top players to enter. Italian doubles specialists Sara Errani and Andrea Vavassori, who criticised the changes, will defend the title they won last year, which came with a $1 million winners' cheque. Djokovic, 39, and 28-year-old Sabalenka are certain to feature among the initial six pairings selected according to world rankings when the deadline for entries closes on August 17. "Anytime you can bring women and men together on the same team, you showcase tennis at its best," said US Tennis Association CEO Craig Tiley. "This is exactly what the mixed doubles championship does. "We are proud to again bring the world's top players together in a format that will provide exciting entertainment for our fans." Wimbledon champion Sinner -- who did not enter last year's mixed doubles -- is "prioritising" his health ahead of the final Grand Slam of the year and is also bypassing the Canadian Open, which runs from August 2-13. Alcaraz, who did play last year with Emma Raducanu, is recovering from a wrist injury that ruled him out of both the French Open and Wimbledon.

Geneva To Host D Gukesh vs Javokhir Sindarov World Chess Championship Match

The FIDE World Championship Match 2026 between reigning champion Gukesh D and challenger Javokhir Sindarov will be held in Geneva, Switzerland, from November 25 to December 15. Both Gukesh of India and Uzbekistan's Sindarov will be just 20 years old when the match begins, making it the youngest World Championship contest in history. The clash also signals a generational shift in world chess, with two of the game's brightest young stars battling for its biggest prize after emerging from an era dominated by seasoned champions.. FIDE Interim President Viswanathan Anand welcomed the announcement. "Several countries expressed a strong interest in hosting the FIDE World Championship Match, including India, the United States and Cyprus," said Anand. The World Championship match will be contested over 14 classical games, with the first player to reach 7.5 points crowned world champion. If either player reaches the winning mark before all 14 games are completed.

HARVARD PLANS ON HOLD, WORLD JUNIOR SQUASH CHAMPION ANAHAT SINGH AIMS FOR OLYMPIC GLORY

Newly-crowned junior squash world champion Anahat Singh has revealed that she placed her academic goals at the prestigious Harvard University on hold this year to give herself the best chance of winning a medal at the 2028 Los Angeles Olympics. Anahat's original plan was to follow in her elder sister Amira's footsteps and pursue higher education at the Harvard. But bolstered by the title triumph in her fifth and final attempt, the 18-year-old now wants to put all her energies into preparing for the upcoming Asian Games and the 2028 Los Angeles Olympics in a couple of years' time. Anahat has been living out of the suitcase for as far as she can remember, juggling top level squash and school. Having graduated from school only a couple of months ago, Anahat has now chosen to focus on the sport to take her game to the next level. "I was supposed to go to college this year, but I decided to take a gap year because of the Asian Games coming up. And now I understand that this year is really important for me regarding squash and, the build up to the LA 2028 (Games)," Anahat told PTI in an interview referring to her plans for squash's Olympic debut. "So, yeah, I mean, just focusing on this year, outside of school, because I've been doing that for the last 12 years (smiles). I'm just focusing on squash for a year and just making sure that I'm at my peak going in to LA 28," she said. World title confidence-boosters ahead of Asia Having got the monkey off her back with a world junior title in her fifth and final appearance, Anahat's next big assignment is the Asian Games in Japan in September-October. If Anahat is to win gold, she will have to find ways to upstage higher-ranked players like world number five Sivasangari Subramaniam from Malaysia and sixth-ranked Satomi Watanabe from Japan. Considering the challenge ahead, the triumph in Canada that included wins over three Egyptians, will give Anahat more confidence against the world's best players. A gold in Japan would secure her automatic qualification to the Olympics. "It (the win at world juniors) definitely adds a lot to my confidence to get into this event.

BCCI DECIDES TO NOT RENEW 2TWO INDIA COACHES' CONTRACTS AFTER ENGLAND SERIES

Winds of change are sweeping through Indian cricket. After the tours of Ireland and England, where India lost two T20I series and an ODI series, the BCCI was expected to conduct a review. It has now been confirmed that the BCCI will not renew the contracts of assistant coach Ryan ten Doeschate and fielding coach T Dilip. The development was shared by BCCI secretary Devajit Saikia. "Assistant coach Ryan Ten Doeschate's two-year contract with Indian men's team ended on June 10. Fielding coach T Dilip, who was given a one-year extension after his original term ended, also had his contract ending on June 8," BCCI secretary Saikia told PTI in an exclusive interaction. "The BCCI continued with the duo till the end of India's tour of United Kingdom. However, the BCCI is not giving them any extension. There is no question of accepting resignation as the contract has ended," the secretary cleared the air. A few reports have claimed that Subhdeep Ghosh will be the new

Indian fielding coach. However, Saikia said: "BCCI is in talks with two or three candidates to finalise the new fielding coach for the Indian men's team." Assam's Ghosh, who has been in the system for last six to seven years since the time of Rahul Dravid at the NCA, is the favourite right now. It must be mentioned that Ten Doeschate intended to leave as when he was brought on board on Gautam Gambhir's insistence, he was promised fielding coach's job but was given no specific role in last two years. In case of Dilip, his extension for one year before the 2025 Test series in England was on insistence of a senior superstar but no one was happy with his performance. It would have been a miracle had he been given any further extension after poor show during the recent white ball tour of UK. India will measure success at the upcoming Glasgow Commonwealth Games not just by medals but by the "knowledge it acquires" ahead of hosting the centenary 2030 edition in Ahmedabad. India's Chef de Mission Rohit Rajpal has said. The 23rd edition of the quadrennial extravaganza beginning on July 23, have been significantly scaled down, featuring only 10 sports -- nine fewer than Birmingham 2022, where India finished fourth with 61 medals (22 gold, 16 silver and 23 bronze). The non-playing captain of India's Davis Cup team, Rajpal in an interview to PTI said the off-field agenda assumes unprecedented significance so that they leave no stone unturned for 2030. "This time, both the Games side and the non-Games side are equally important," Rajpal said from Glasgow after reviewing preparations ahead of the opening ceremony. "There will be knowledge-transfer programmes on the sidelines so we can match or better things when we host the next Games in India. We will also be taking back the flag and the baton."

Roberto Mancini Named Italy Football Team Head Coach For Second Time

Roberto Mancini has once again been tasked with revitalizing an Italy team in crisis, almost exactly three years after he bolted on the national team. Italian soccer federation Giovanni Malago announced Mancini as the new Italy coach on Tuesday, adding that Claudio Ranieri will become the new technical director after Paolo Maldini stepped down the previous day -- just 16 days after being appointed. The 61-year-old Mancini led the Azzurri to the European Championship title in 2021 but shockingly resigned as Italy coach in August 2023, taking over Saudi Arabia's national team two weeks later. "Time was running out ... I believed the person who should become the new coach of Italy is Roberto Mancini, for a whole list of reasons," Malago said. "There will be a press conference tomorrow with both Claudio Ranieri and Roberto Mancini." The Italian national team is in crisis after failing for a third straight time to qualify for the World Cup, prompting the resignations of FIGC president Gabriele Gravina and coach Gennaro Gattuso in April.

Why Sanju Samson Quit Following Virat Kohli's Lifestyle Advice After 1 Year

Virat Kohli remains the ultimate benchmark for cricketers worldwide. Since making his India debut, Kohli has transformed not only how batters approach the game, but also how elite athletes manage their lifestyle. From eliminating gluten to spending countless hours in the gym, he raised cricketing fitness standards to an unprecedented level. Although it has been over a decade since the Indian icon underwent this transformation, even younger players struggle to match his discipline. Sanju Samson recently shared an intriguing anecdote, revealing that he once asked Kohli for lifestyle advice, only to give up on it after about a year. Speaking on JioStar's show Believe, Samson praised the intensity Kohli brings to the gym and recalled receiving advice on maintaining the diet and routine required for international cricket. He admitted to implementing Kohli's suggestions, but confessed he soon lost track. "We all know how Virat bhai is. He is very clear and very straightforward with everyone. If you need to do something, he will tell you exactly what is required. The way he carries himself in the gym, there is a different fire in that guy, and I really love that about him. We both were working out together in the gym during an Indian team camp, and I asked him, 'Paaji, what should I do? Tell me something too!,' he said. "He told me that lifestyle plays a huge role. If you want to become an international cricketer, you must maintain a different kind of lifestyle. He shared what works for him on his journey and told me, 'This food will help your body recover, this would not.

Zinedine Zidane Appointed As New Coach Of France After Didier Deschamps' Departure

Zinedine Zidane was appointed France coach on Tuesday, as widely expected, following the departure of Didier Deschamps, the French Football Federation's president. "For me, it's an immense joy... about being able to become the coach of this French team. I don't have any other words," said Zidane. "I'm holding myself back because I have so many emotions inside me. I'm ready for the challenge, that's what drives me today." Former Real Madrid star Zidane, who was Deschamps' teammate in the 1998 World Cup triumph, has been readying himself for the role since leaving Real Madrid in 2021. "The France job was the only one I wanted," Zidane said after his unveiling at the FFF headquarters in Paris.

"I've had offers over these four or five years to take charge of a club and I turned them all down for the French national team."

Sarvesh Kushare: Onion Farmer's Son From Nashik Who Earned Historic Commonwealth Games Silver

National record holder Sarvesh Kushare scripted history as he became the first Indian to win a silver medal in the men's high jump event of the Commonwealth Games, losing the gold by the narrowest of margins in an enthralling showdown with Jamaica's Romaine Beckford. After sailing over 2.25m, both the 31-year-old Kushare and Beckford failed to clear the 2.28m mark. But the Jamaican took the gold as he had one less failed attempt than the Indian on count-back. The bronze went to Jack Kimani (2.20m) of England.

The other Indian in the fray, Adarsh Ram, finished fifth with 2.15m. Before Monday, Tejaswin Shankar was the lone Indian to have won a high jump medal -- a bronze in the 2022 Birmingham Games. But Kushare bettered it with his silver. It was Kushare's first medal in the CWG and that too on debut. Tejaswin also competed on Monday and retired after failing to clear 2.05m in his first attempt. The move was a precautionary measure for Tejaswin as he is competing in the men's decathlon starting on Thursday. The 27-year-old, who has a personal best of 2.29m, has not competed in too many individual high jump events in the last two years as he has been focussing on decathlon. Son of an onion farmer at Devargaoon village in Maharashtra's Nashik district, Kushare used to practice high jump by using makeshift landing pits made of corn husks, cotton, and agricultural waste, prepared by his father and childhood coach.

Ravindra Jadeja Returns To India Squad, Uncapped Star Earns Surprise Call-Up For Sri Lanka Tests

Veteran India all-rounder Ravindra Jadeja marked his return as the Board of Control for Cricket in India (BCCI) announced the squad for the upcoming two-match Test series against Sri Lanka. Having fully recovered from a tennis elbow injury sustained during the 2026 Indian Premier League (IPL) in May, Jadeja makes his comeback to bolster India's spin attack in Subcontinental conditions. The announcement also marks the maiden India call-up for spin-bowling all-rounder Saransh Jain, who comes into the 15-man squad as a replacement for Washington

Sundar, who was unavailable for selection due to a hamstring injury sustained during the ODI series in England. A seasoned campaigner for Madhya Pradesh with 181 First-Class wickets to his name, Jain secured his spot following impressive performances for India A against Sri Lanka A recently. Saransh has established himself as a reliable bowling all-rounder over 54 First-Class matches, proving to be a mainstay for Madhya Pradesh and earning recognition at the India A level. Operating primarily as a right-arm off-spinner, he has claimed 181 wickets at an average of 27.30 and a controlled economy rate of nearly 3.01 runs per over, with best innings figures of 6/75. With the bat, the left-handed lower-middle-order hitter offers vital depth, having amassed 2,223 runs across 85 innings at an average of 31.75. He has registered 14 half-centuries and two First-Class century (top score of 103), making him a well-rounded utility player who can fill in the void left by Washington Sundar. In a press release, the BCCI said: "The Men's Selection Committee has selected India's squad for the two-match Test series against Sri Lanka. Ahead of the series, the team will play a four-day practice match in Colombo, starting on 7 August." The BCCI also said that Sai Sudharsan and Jasprit Bumrah's availability will be subject to fitness clearance from the BCCI COE. Washington Sundar was not available for selection for the first Test.

Making Video Titled The Origin of Agadha Released

Under the banner of Sri Adi Varaha Productions, presented by Ajay KR and produced by Kashi Visalakshi Balusu, acclaimed filmmaker M.S. Raju has directed the upcoming film Agadha. The film stars Kamakshi Bhaskarla, Shravan Reddy, Ulka Gupta, Jovika Vijaykumar, Bhanu Chander, Siju, Vanitha Vijaykumar, Roshan Basheer, Shreya Rani Reddy, Viva Raghava, Robert Master, Arna Muller, and Kanakavva in pivotal roles. Agadha is all set for a grand theatrical release on August 14. The film's teaser has already been trending on YouTube. The makers have now unveiled a special making ing video titled "The Origin of Agadha," offering fascinating insights into the making of this ambitious project. Speaking on the occasion, M.S. Raju said: "No matter how many films I have produced or directed, I never feel completely settled. Every film is a new experience and a fresh challenge. Throughout my career, films like Devi, Manasantha Nuvve, Okkadu, Varsham, and Nuvvostanante Nenoddantana challenged me immensely in terms of story and screenplay. Agadha has been another such challenge. From the moment I conceived this story, I knew it would demand an extraordinary journey. I wanted to create episodes that audiences had never experienced before. I travelled across several states, visited remote villages steeped in superstition, and met people living amidst such beliefs. During one such visit, I witnessed a woman performing rituals believed to expel evil spirits. That encounter inspired the character of Mahadevi. To balance her powerful presence, I created the equally compelling character of Simha. After considering many actors, I found Simha in Shravan Reddy. A film of this scale requires strong production support. Sri Adi Varaha Productions and producer Kashi Visalakshi Balusu stood firmly behind me, allowing me to focus entirely on filmmaking. The role of Ulka is portrayed by an actress from Mumbai. Jovika and Siju have delivered outstanding performances. Nani's cinematography is exceptional. We conducted extensive research for both the story and screenplay. I wanted actors who would truly own their characters, and I was fortunate to find such an incredible cast.

RANBIR GIVES YRF AN UNEXPECTED DHOOM 4 TWIST?

Ranbir Kapoor has reportedly decided to opt out of Dhoom 4 after being dissatisfied with the film's revised script. The project was initially expected to be directed by Ayan Mukerji. However, following the underperformance of War 2, the makers are said to have reworked the screenplay. Despite the changes, reports claim that Ranbir Kapoor was not convinced by the new version of the script and chose to step away from the project. His decision has come as a surprise to Yash Raj Films, as he was considered a key part of the film's plans and was supposed to play the main villain. With Kapoor no longer attached, the production house is now reportedly exploring other casting options to move the project forward. No official announcement has been made by either Ranbir Kapoor or Yash Raj Films regarding these reports, and details about the film's future remain unconfirmed. Fans are now waiting to see who will be approached to lead the project and whether the film will proceed with a new cast.
