New Delhi (TSIT)

Cockroach Janta Party on Wednesday said thousands of protesters had gathered at the Jantar Mantar, with spokesperson Saurav Das sharing visuals of the crowd swelling at the protest site.

Speaking to ANI news agency, CJP spokesperson Ashutosh Ranka claimed "millions more will come" if the government doesn't agree to their demands. Meanwhile, the ministry of home affairs ordered the immediate deployment of 20 additional CRPF companies to Delhi. The CRPF companies are being brought in from West Bengal.

Heavy barricading continues at various areas in Delhi, including Parliament House and Rafi Marg, even as the Cockroach Janta Party continues its protest at the Jantar Mantar demanding the resignation of union education minister Dharmendra Pradhan over alleged irregularities in NEET.

A total of six FIRs have been filed so far over the alleged violence and vandalism during the protest march held by the CJP on Monday, at Parliament Street, Connaught Place and other police stations, with police likely to probe a "larger and criminal conspiracy" behind the matter reported.

'India needs you, not in suffering, but in service': Opposition MPs urge Wangchuk to end fast

Sonam Wangchuk says he will end fast if govt assures no action against protesters

New Delhi: Climate activist Sonam Wangchuk has set conditions for the government to end his fast. In a letter addressed to Union Health Minister J.P. Nadda and Minister of State Jitendra Singh, Wangchuk thanked them for visiting him at Medanta Hospital and appealing to him to end the fast. "During our discussion, you assured me that the Government would positively consider adequate compensation for the families of students who committed suicide following the examination paper leak, and initiate a meaningful discussion in Parliament to ensure accountability, including consideration of the resignation of the Hon'ble Education Minister," Wangchuk said in the letter.

152 paper leaks in a decade: Rahul guns for Modi apology

He also alleged that police officers who were dragging him whispered in his ears that they were fed up with the current government.

New Delhi: In an all-out attack on the Narendra Modi government, Leader of the Opposition in Lok Sabha Rahul Gandhi said the Prime Minister should immediately apologise to students after the brutal attack by Delhi Police on them on Monday during the Chalo Sansad march.

In a press conference on Wednesday, July 22, the Congress leader condemned violence against students, several identified as school children, use of tear gas, lathi charges, assault and humiliation. "The question is why is this happening to students. What exactly have they done. Thousands of them. To have security forces aiming weapons at them. What have they done? They are protesting peacefully. They are asking for what this country owes them," Gandhi said, asserting their demands are legitimate.

"In every government, there comes a time when psychologically the leadership collapses. And this government is visibly panicked," he told the media. Gandhi, his sister and Congress general secretary Priyanka Gandhi Vadra, Samajwadi Party chief Akhilesh Yadav and other Opposition leaders staged a sit-in in front of PM Modi's residence on Tuesday demanding his resignation and the government take accountability for the deteriorating education system in the country. They were forcibly removed and detained by the Delhi Police.

On being pushed and dragged, Rahul Gandhi said, "It's a huge honour to be able to express the will of people. I am used to getting punched. Happy to take many more." He also alleged that police officers who were dragging him whispered in his ears that they were fed up with the current government. "As they were taking me, some said, 'Sir, please remove the BJP government.'"

Philippines envoy hails PM Modi's leadership, highlights growing bilateral ties

New Delhi, July 22 : Ambassador of the Philippines to India, Josel F Ignacio on Wednesday hailed Prime Minister Narendra Modi's leadership, saying that India is far different from what it was several decades ago and now heading to becoming a 'Viksit Bharat'.

In an interview with IANS, Ignacio appreciated PM Modi's efforts in strengthening ties between both countries and stated that India-Philippines relations are at an "all-time high" with room to elevate them further.

"Prime Minister Modi, I think, is very much admired around the world and that's certainly shared by the Philippines. We are happy that our leaders Prime Minister Modi Ji and President Marcos met in August last year here in Delhi and built good friendship and rapport. But, beyond that also, we saw a meeting of the minds when it comes to global priorities, advancing economic prosperity, rule of law, connectivity, energy security, food security, digital public infrastructure, all these priorities," said Ambassador Ignacio.

"I think as a leader, Prime Minister Modi has done much for India and India now is far different from the India of several decades ago. We see how India is well on its way to Viksit Bharat, and, of course, the Philippines supports India in that respect. I think that when it comes to developmental aspirations, both countries have much room to work together in order to meet our respective desires and hopes and aspirations for our respective people. So, we're glad that the Philippines and India under our current leaders are cultivating such a good relationship and we give credit to Prime Minister Modi for helping bring our relations to such heights," he added.

The diplomat highlighted the growing trade ties between both countries and stated that both nations crossed the USD 3 billion mark while fast approaching to USD 4 billion. "I would say that Philippines-India relations are at an all-time high and there is always room to elevate them even further. We are very satisfied that over the past few years, our relationship has expanded and intensified significantly. We are now strategic partners and under this we are cultivating broad-based cooperation from defence to even military cooperation," Ignacio told IANS. "In the economy, we are boosting our trade. In 2023, we crossed the US$3 billion mark, and we are now approaching USD 4 billion... We have direct flights between our countries after more than a decade. Tourism is increasing significantly in both directions, aided by our more relaxed visa policy. For the Philippines, we relaxed visa access to Indians. Indians are visa-free for 14 days for tourism or short-term business. So, all these things, I think, sum up to a very good relationship, that is the basis for further growth," he added.

A Rs 5,000 Fine Can't Fix India's 'Babu' Raj. But It's A Start

One small step for the government, and a giant leap for governance? That's the question that popped up in my mind this week as I read about an interesting decision by the Delhi government's cabinet to fine officials a maximum of Rs 5,000 if their service for citizens is delayed without a valid justification. If it is approved as expected, the Delhi (Right of Citizen to Time Bound and Ease of Delivery of Service) Bill replaces/upgrades a similar 2011 Act. As the name suggests, it holds itself accountable to citizens with a proposal to impose a fine of Rs 250 a day, with a Rs 5,000 ceiling.

In principle, this is a great idea and also reflects an increasing democratisation of governance in which elected leaders pressure the bureaucracy to do what is expected of them. But there is a very long way to go, because in India, which the UK's The Economist magazine once described as "a natural habitat of the clerk," there is a lot to do to undo the process-driven bureaucratisation that the magazine's land of birth itself left in its imperial stamp on its colony. The very same magazine recently ran a self-explanatory editorial titled, "Why can't India's government build a decent website?", and moaned about clunky online experiences among "failures of "Indian officialdom". Any casual watcher of the old BBC comedy series, "Yes, Minister", would be assured that "Great" Britain has been not so great in political control over bureaucrats. The culture is such. It does get tricky. How do you hold bureaucrats and lower-level government officials responsible in a system in which incentives and disincentives have to be balanced with costs, processes, and public accountability to legislators and institutions like the Comptroller and Auditor General? A rule-based system cannot easily function like an incentive-based culture or a severe hire-and-fire mechanism.

Prime Minister Narendra Modi's government is officially aware of the bureaucracy problem, but the solution requires re-engineering a culture from the bottom up. The ongoing controversy over the alphabet soup of state-run public examinations, NEET, CUET, and CBSE school exams, suggests that ministers and bureaucrats need to be sensitive to an increasing mass of aware citizens demanding accountability and efficient service. Again, the buck-passing involving politicians and so-called autonomous bodies, such as the National Testing Agency, shows that you cannot have autonomy without accountability, and you cannot absolve yourself of a responsibility by pointing to a structural autonomy designed to reduce bureaucratisation.

Much like the inflation-interest rate trade-off in macro-economics, this requires a trade-off between empowerment that improves efficiency and transparency that ensures there is no abuse of power.

Outsourcing things to private agencies, often risking underhand corruption as well as the "Li syndrome" in which the lowest bidder in a contract need not necessarily be the best service provider, is a trade-off between transparency at low cost and the public's desire to get better services.

WHY TRUMP DOESN'T EVEN WANT TO SEE NETANYAHU ANYMORE

It was just over five months ago that President Trump invited Israel's prime minister, Benjamin Netanyahu, to the White House's Situation Room, a rare honour for a foreign leader. The highly classified event, attended by the top security teams of both countries, was arranged at Netanyahu's request to persuade Trump to launch a joint military operation against Iran. The Israeli leader managed to convince the President that this was an opportunity for the US to secure a quick victory, similar to the one it achieved in Venezuela a month earlier. But that proved to be not only a major miscalculation but also the worst foreign policy decision by a US president in decades.

Trump is now so annoyed with Netanyahu that he doesn't even want to meet him. After failing to get an appointment with the President, the Israeli leader had to cancel his planned Monday visit to Washington. In recent weeks, Trump has humiliated Netanyahu by calling him 'crazy' and using expletives during phone calls. Last month, he told the Financial Times, "I call all the shots." Referring to Netanyahu, he added, "he doesn't call the shots". It is a remarkable fall from grace and power for the veteran Israeli leader, who, for over three decades, openly confronted and sometimes even lectured US presidents, without jeopardising his position or damaging Israel's special relationship with the United States. But that has now changed.

Shifting US Opinion

For the first time since the State of Israel's establishment in 1948, the US political consensus in Israel's favour is under the most serious strain, largely due to Netanyahu's actions. Last week, more than 100 Democratic members of the House of Representatives (about half of their strength) voted to end $3 billion in military and humanitarian aid to Israel. Although the proposal was defeated, prominent Democrats, including Nancy Pelosi, Katherine Clark of Massachusetts (the minority whip), and Ro Khanna, backed it. Israel has been the largest recipient of US foreign aid since World War II, receiving over $300 billion between 1946 and 2025. The proposal to cut aid was intended as a protest against the actions of the Israeli government in Gaza, the West Bank, and Lebanon. Israel can't survive without military and economic aid from the United States. A week earlier, Rahm Emanuel, chief of staff in the Obama White House and a potential Democratic Party nominee for the 2028 Presidential election, delivered a stern message to Israel. Emanuel, who is Jewish and whose father was born in Jerusalem, told Tel Aviv University that the US-Israel alliance "can not stand or survive as it has been" and needs significant changes and a new direction. He attacked Netanyahu's leadership, which he said had turned Israel into a "territorial pariah", adding that America's "unconditional support has allowed you to deny food and medical relief to innocent Palestinians in Gaza, leaving the world to conclude that Israelis not only want to kill Palestinians, but are completely indifferent to their death, to their destruction and completely indifferent to their suffering". Even sections of the Republican Party, which were earlier staunch supporters of Israel, are now openly critical of its government. The Vice President, JD Vance, who warned Netanyahu a month ago that President Trump was Israel's only ally, last week accused it of funding a campaign to manipulate US public opinion about the Iran war and to undermine negotiations to end the conflict. These developments reflect shifting public opinion in the United States about Israel, particularly since Netanyahu's disproportionate military campaign in Gaza following the Hamas attack on October 7, 2023. More than 72,000 Palestinians were killed in that campaign. In February, a Gallup survey found - for the first time in the poll's history - that more Americans now sympathise with Palestinians than with Israelis.. In April, a Pew survey found that 60% of Americans have an unfavourable view of the Israeli government. The survey also found that, across both political parties, majorities of adults under 50 now rate Israel and Netanyahu negatively. Among Democrats, the figure was 84%.

Trump-Netanyahu Bromance

Soon after taking office, Trump announced a plan to 'relocate' Palestinians from Gaza to new homes elsewhere and presented a stunning proposal. He suggested that the US would take ownership of the strip and build what he called the "Riviera of the Middle East". Netanyahu was thrilled, as it gave him a political lifeline. However, Trump soon realised the plan was unrealistic, and the Gaza war was becoming increasingly unpopular in the US. With some Israeli hostages still held by Hamas, the dealmaker in Trump saw an opportunity. Within months, he presented his 20-point peace plan for Gaza and imposed a ceasefire on both Israel and Hamas. This marked the first setback for Netanyahu, who wanted the conflict to continue.

Lasting Damage

But Netanyahu had a bigger plan: to invade Iran. He had been trying to persuade American presidents to attack the Islamic Republic for more than three decades, but all had turned down the idea, except Trump. The Israeli leader had already convinced him during his first term to abandon the 2015 Iran nuclear deal, the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action (JCPOA), negotiated by President Obama. In June 2025, Trump decided to bomb Iran's nuclear facilities during the war started by Israel, even though the US and Iran were negotiating a new nuclear agreement at the time. The US decision to join Israel's war in February was seen in Israel as a major success for Netanyahu.

But as we know now, the war has trapped Trump, forcing him to sign a humiliating MOU with Iran, which has emerged as a more radical and uncompromising country. Tehran now has leverage to halt a fifth of the world's energy supplies passing through the Strait of Hormuz. No wonder Trump is frustrated and angry with Netanyahu. It's been even worse for Israel, making the Jewish nation more insecure and destroying Netanyahu's Mr Security brand at home. One of his war aims was to gain popularity and get re-elected in the October elections. But that now looks increasingly unlikely as Netanyahu is blamed for the debacle in Iran. Two opinion polls published in the past few days in Israel predict a narrow victory for the opposition in the upcoming election. One poll gives Netanyahu's coalition only 48 seats in the upcoming election, while another gives it 50, still short of the 61-seat mark for a majority in the Knesset. Netanyahu's Questionable Record

The Iran war is the culmination of a series of actions by Netanyahu over the years that have harmed Israel's reputation overseas and damaged its special relationship with the United States.

CRISIS IN THE EDUCATION SYSTEM:

Why Won't the Government Accept the Education Minister's Resignation?

Saurabh Varshney

A nation's greatest asset is not its natural resources, but its young generation. It is these young people who lay the foundation for the country's future. If their dreams, hard work, and future are jeopardized, it becomes not merely an administrative failure but a matter of national concern. Recent incidents involving the leaking of question papers for various competitive examinations across the country have deeply shaken the confidence of millions of students. Today, lakhs of students are asking: if the value of their hard work is not secure, what meaning remains in their years of struggle? Just as the government is quick to claim credit for the successful conduct of examinations, the New Education Policy, or reforms in the education sector, it must also accept moral responsibility for the failures of the examination system. In a democratic setup, accountability is not limited to achievements alone; accepting responsibility for failures is also an essential principle of good governance. The recurring incidents of question paper leaks in various parts of the country are not merely technical glitches. They indicate a serious institutional weakness within the examination system. Each time, an inquiry committee is formed, arrests are made, and assurances are given—yet, after a while, the same incidents recur. This cycle has eroded the students' trust. Today, the country's students are compelled to take to the streets to demand their rights. Students are staging peaceful protests at various locations, including Jantar Mantar in the capital, Delhi. Amidst lathi-charges, scorching heat, rain, and harsh conditions, they have but one demand: that their hard work and future be safeguarded. It is an irony that the youth power, which ought to be in libraries and laboratories, is forced to stage sit-ins and protests for its rights. In a democracy, protest is not a crime. The Constitution grants every citizen the right to express their views peacefully. Instead of viewing the students' voices through a political lens, it is essential to understand their anguish. After all, they are not demanding special privileges; they merely seek fair examinations and equal opportunities. At this juncture, the question naturally arises: will the Ministry of Education accept moral responsibility for this entire sequence of events? In Indian democracy, ministers have often established a tradition of accountability by resigning on moral grounds. A resignation is not a personal defeat; rather, it can symbolize accountability to the system and respect for democratic values. However, it is equally important to recognize that a minister's resignation alone is not a permanent solution. If the flaws plaguing the entire examination system are not rectified, the same problems could recur even under a new minister. Therefore, comprehensive reforms are needed—such as the use of state-of-the-art technology in conducting exams, a secure digital system for question papers, swift and stringent action against the guilty, effective control over the 'exam mafia,' and the establishment of a transparent investigation mechanism. The government must also understand that today's generation seeks results, not mere assurances. Known as 'Gen-Z,' this generation is tech-savvy, conscious of its rights, and expects accountability. If their hard work repeatedly falls victim to systemic weaknesses, it is natural for their faith in democratic institutions to erode. The role of the opposition is also crucial here. In a democracy, the opposition's duty is not merely to criticize the government but also to convey the voices of the public—especially the youth—to Parliament and society at large. If students take to the streets to voice their grievances, listening to them and providing a proper platform for their concerns is part of the democratic obligation. At the same time, any agitation must remain entirely peaceful and within constitutional bounds. Today, the paramount question concerns not just any single individual, but the credibility of the entire education system. If the country's meritorious students begin to feel that success is determined not by their hard work but by leaked question papers or organized corruption, it poses a serious threat to the process of nation-building. The government currently faces both an opportunity and a challenge. If it adopts a path of transparency, accountability, and comprehensive reforms, the trust of students can be regained. However, if matters remain limited to mere assurances and inquiry committees, the chasm of discontent and mistrust will only widen. This is the time to rise above politics and make decisions in the national interest. The future of students is greater than any government, political party, or individual. Restoring the credibility of the education system is not solely the government's obligation but the responsibility of the entire democracy. Accountability must be fixed, the guilty must face severe punishment, the examination system must undergo lasting reforms, and the nation's youth must be assured that their hard work will be respected. For a nation's future is secure only when the trust of its students is secure.

Student protests: Debate straying from issues and concerns about the future

— Dr. Satyawan Saurabh

In a democracy, protest is not only a right but also an effective means of ensuring accountability. When serious flaws in the system are exposed, the public raises its voice and demands answers from the government. Especially when the future of millions of students is at stake, the voice of protest becomes even more natural. Reports of alleged irregularities and paper leaks in national exams like NEET have alarmed youth and their parents across the country. After years of hard work, when the fairness of an exam is questioned, it is not unusual for outrage to arise. But this entire incident also raises a significant question: is the purpose of student movements truly the future of students, or are they gradually becoming a platform for political and ideological conflicts? The greatest strength of any student movement is its morality. When students fight for their rights and future, society stands with them. Parents, teachers, and ordinary citizens also consider their demands justified. But as the focus of the movement shifts and topics unrelated to the original issue begin to surface, its credibility is bound to be questioned. If the platform for protesting exam irregularities becomes the center of slogans, speeches, or controversies that have no direct connection to the education system, the movement's gravity diminishes and the real issue is left behind. Today, the country's youth is troubled by paper leaks. They worry that years of hard work may be wasted due to some criminal gang. In such a situation, the most important questions should be how to stop paper leaks, how to make the examination system more secure, how quickly and severely will the culprits be punished, and what institutional reforms will be implemented to prevent such incidents in the future. If these fundamental questions are replaced by political slogans and debates about opposition to or support for the government, the path to a solution is weakened. It must also be acknowledged that paper leaks are not a new problem. Cases of irregularities in various competitive examinations have been reported in different states, under different governments. This clearly demonstrates that the problem is not limited to a single party, a single minister, or a single government. The problem lies within the very system that criminal gangs are able to infiltrate. Therefore, if discussions are limited to political accusations and counter-accusations, the real culprits will escape, and students will suffer again and again. A minister's resignation may be a matter of democratic accountability, but it is not a definitive solution in itself. Changing ministers will only transform the system if administrative reforms, technical security, transparent investigations, and strict punishment are implemented. Without addressing the root causes, simply changing faces will not change the outcome. Therefore, the focus of student movements should be on systemic reform, not individuals. In the age of social media, the direction of movements shifts rapidly. A few seconds of video clips, a slogan, or a single post can shape the image of an entire movement. This is why the responsibility of those involved in the movement is greater than ever. If slogans are heard on stage that have no connection to exams or education, ordinary citizens are forced to wonder whether the original purpose of the movement is the same as initially stated. Ideologies have a place in democracy, but when student movements become a medium for ideological competition, the greatest harm is suffered by the very students in whose name the movement was started. Any person active in public life—whether a social activist, a student leader, or the face of a movement—can be both agreed upon and disagreed with. Democracy is the essence of this diversity. But any movement should be judged not by the popularity of individuals, but by its purpose and results. If a movement is started for the future of students, then every action, every slogan, and every demand should strengthen that purpose. Otherwise, society's trust begins to weaken. The need today is not just for blame, but for comprehensive reform. A state-of-the-art digital security system must be developed for national-level examinations. Accountability must be established at every stage, from the creation of question papers to their distribution. Cybersecurity must be strengthened. Serious consideration must be given to stringent measures such as confiscation of assets of organized gangs involved in paper leaks, speedy justice, and lifelong bans. The problem will not be completely eradicated until criminals fear that their crimes will be severely penalized. Political parties also have no less responsibility. Instead of avoiding criticism, the ruling party should take transparent action, while the opposition should offer constructive suggestions rather than limiting itself to criticizing the government. If every issue is viewed solely through the lens of political gains and losses, students' trust in democratic institutions will diminish. Education and the future of youth are far more important than any political gain. Society also needs to introspect. Too often, we quickly judge the pros and cons based on viral videos, incomplete information, or emotional messages on social media. However, any movement or controversy should be evaluated based on facts, evidence, and a balanced perspective. Dissent is necessary in a democracy, but it is only meaningful when expressed with discretion and responsibility. Students must also understand that their greatest strength lies in their moral credibility. If they remain united on their issues, the entire society will stand with them.

The company also posted a net loss of Rs 3,960 crore, substantially lower than the consensus estimate of a Rs 12,632 crore loss. BPCL Strong, HPCL Weak: How Suppressed Fuel Margins Dictated Q1 Earnings

India's state-run oil marketing companies (OMCs) reported sharply contrasting June quarter performances, with Bharat Petroleum Corporation Ltd. (BPCL) delivering a much stronger-than-expected earnings performance, while Hindustan Petroleum Corporation Ltd. (HPCL) reported a weaker operational showing despite both companies being hit by suppressed fuel marketing margins. The losses were widely anticipated during the quarter as government-led pricing constraints squeezed gross marketing margins on petrol and diesel. BPCL Delivers Strong Earnings Beat BPCL reported an Ebitda loss of Rs 4,080 crore for the June quarter, significantly better than the Bloomberg estimate of an Ebitda loss of Rs 13,713 crore. The company also posted a net loss of Rs 3,960 crore, substantially lower than the consensus estimate of a Rs 12,632 crore loss. According to analysts, BPCL's better-than-expected performance was driven by lower other expenditure, stronger gross refining margins (GRMs) and lower inventory losses during the quarter. The company also benefited from a foreign exchange gain of around Rs 350 crore, which boosted other income. However, BPCL's debt increased by Rs 6,920 crore sequentially to Rs 17,396 crore at the end of the quarter. HPCL Reports Weaker Quarter HPCL reported an Ebitda loss of Rs 16,140 crore during the quarter, wider than the Bloomberg estimate of a Rs 12,672 crore loss. The company posted a net loss of Rs 11,530 crore, although it was marginally better than the consensus estimate of a Rs 12,296 crore loss. Analysts said HPCL's earnings were hit harder because of its relatively higher dependence on the fuel marketing business, where margins remained under pressure during the quarter. While HPCL's gross refining margin improved sharply to $23.8 per barrel from $14.3 per barrel in the previous quarter, the benefit was not enough to offset weakness in the marketing segment. HPCL's debt also rose sharply, increasing by around Rs 25,000 crore quarter-on-quarter to Rs 72,600 crore. Marketing Margins Remain The Key Driver The June quarter highlighted the importance of fuel marketing margins for India's oil marketing companies.

WHO IS MYKHAILO DRAPATYI, UKRAINE'S NEW COMMANDER - IN-CHIEF?

Maj Gen Mykhailo Drapatyi, 43, has replaced Oleksandr Syrskyi as Ukraine's commander-in-chief - the third since the start of Russia's full-scale invasion in 2022. His nomination has been welcomed by both civil society and the military. Drapatyi's name was chanted during protests that started off backing his friend, ex-defence minister Mykhailo Fedorov, but ended up demanding Syrskyi's dismissal. "There's no better person for this position nowadays in Ukraine," one Ukrainian soldier told the BBC. Drapatyi's support rests on years of military experience in post-Soviet Ukraine, his skills as field general and his reputation for being a humane and strong commander among the military. He graduated from the Kharkiv Institute of Tank Troops in 2004 and began serving as a lieutenant. Ten years later he gained prominence when footage went viral showing his infantry fighting vehicle smashing through a makeshift barricade. It was May 2014 and pro-Russian separatists had taken over parts of eastern Ukraine, when Drapatyi's battalion entered the southern city of Mariupol to free hostages held in the city's police department. He later recalled being told there were barricades more than a metre high ahead and being asked what to do. "I said, let's take it by storm. This video flew around the world," he said in an interview. Later that year, he was commended for withdrawing encircled Ukrainian units from a border area of the Luhansk region. Drapaty returned to university in 2021 for further operational and strategic training and was presented with a sword of honour as top graduate in June 2021 by British ambassador Melinda Simmons. When Russia's full-scale invasion began in February 2022, Drapaty was deputy commander of joint forces.

US TO ANNOUNCE DEAL ALLOWING SAUDI ARABIA A NUCLEAR PROGRAMME

The US and Saudi Arabia are expected to announce a deal that will allow the Gulf kingdom to develop a civilian nuclear programme. An announcement is expected from US President Donald Trump's administration on Wednesday, according to CBS News, the BBC's US partner. The agreement could be worth billions of dollars to the US, whose companies could be involved in building a facility to produce enriched uranium, which can be used as fuel for power plants but also to make nuclear bombs. Nuclear experts and former officials in Israel - the US's top ally in the Middle East - have voiced concern that the plan could ultimately lead to Saudi Arabia being able to develop a nuclear weapon. The BBC has asked the White House for comment. The deal would allow U.S. companies to run nuclear power for the Saudis on Saudi soil, CBS reported citing a regional official familiar with the agreement. The corporations involved have not been disclosed and Congress would need to be consulted. After undertaking a joint study with the guish this agreement from another one that was struck by the US in 2009 with Saudi Arabia's neighbour, the United Arab Emirates, under which the UAE does not produce its own fuel and accepts a host of other restrictions. For that reason, the agreement is also expected to attract the concern of nuclear non-proliferation campaigners, whose ultimate aim is to prevent an increase in the number of nuclear weapons worldwide. The nuclear issue has been at the centre of the months-long US-Israeli conflict with Iran. The two nations say one of the reasons they attacked Iran in February was to prevent the country from ever developing a nuclear weapon - something that Tehran denies planning to do.

BRITISH WOMAN JAILED FOR BLACKMAIL AFTER ACCUSING BANKER OF RAPE IN HONG KONG

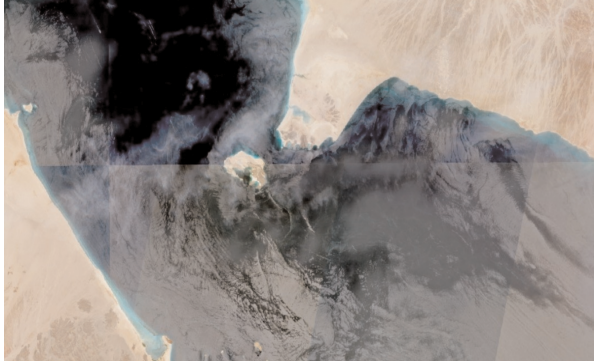

A British woman has been jailed for six years in Hong Kong for blackmail and perverting the course of justice after a court found she made a false allegation of rape. Isabel Rose, 26, from Hackney in east London, alleged that a British banker raped her after she travelled to Hong Kong to visit him in January 2024. The man was arrested after she reported the incident but later released without charge. Rose was subsequently arrested and charged. Local media reported that Rose was in Hong Kong's District Court on Wednesday for sentencing after being convicted in March. She had denied the charges. "I didn't wanna have sex" According to local press reports, Judge Adriana Tse sentenced her to five years in prison for blackmail and three years for perverting the course of justice, with one year to be served consecutively. Prosecutors argued that Rose fabricated the allegation in an attempt to extort £100,000 ($134,000) from the man, whose identity was withheld. Rose denied the charges throughout the trial and has consistently maintained that she was raped. Rose had travelled to Hong Kong on 31 January 2024 after meeting the man while in Thailand a month earlier, according to court documents. At the centre of the prosecution case were WhatsApp messages exchanged between the pair in the hours and days after the alleged rape on 1

February at his apartment. In one message sent the following morning, Rose wrote: "Are you annoyed I didn't want to have sex," to which the man replied: "What no of course not. Was impressed by your restraint." Later that day, Rose wrote: "You violated me last night, I didn't wanna have sex." He replied: "I'm really deeply sorry, I was slightly drunk and I misread your signals, it's no excuse and I know it doesn't make it any better." In a later exchange, Rose wrote: "You basically raped me." The man replied: "That's not what I'm into at all and I feel sick." The pair later exchanged messages about money. According to the written judgement of the verdict published in March, the man agreed to reimburse Rose for her travel and accommodation. In one message, Rose wrote: "Send me the right amount you owe me for everything. Think about that. Think carefully." He transferred £5,000 that day and tried to send a further £5,000. Rose subsequently wrote: "You've given 10% of what I'm owed. 100% of my soul gone." In a later message, the man wrote: "But I don't have 100k, I have no way of paying you that." Rose reported the rape to police on 3 February. The man was arrested and questioned before being released without charge. Rose was arrested the following day and later charged with blackmail and perverting the course of public justice.

TANKERS MAKE SHARP U-TURNS AFTER HOUTHI SHIPPING THREAT

At least seven oil tankers have made U-turns close to Yemen since the Iran-linked Houthi group announced a "maritime embargo" against Saudi Arabia on Monday, ship-tracking data shows. All of the ships were travelling either to or from Saudi ports and made sharp changes of course after the embargo was announced. Nearly 15% of global sea trade moves through the Red Sea, which connects the Mediterranean and Gulf of Aden through two choke points - the Suez Canal in Egypt and the Bab al-Mandab Strait between Yemen and the Horn of Africa. The Red Sea has been a key route for exports of Saudi oil since the US-Israeli war with Iran led to the effective closure of the Strait of Hormuz, which has severely restricted the flow of oil and gas from the Gulf. This has played a "major role in relieving pressure to global markets" and if the Houthis further restrict trade then "prices will go up", said Rosemary Kelanic from the US-based Defense

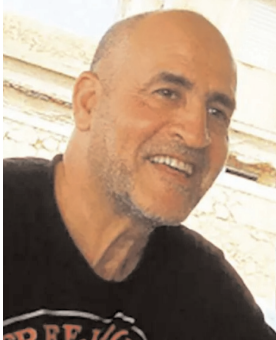

Priorities think tank. The day before the Houthis announced their blockade, 20 vessels entered the Red Sea and 22 exited via the Bab al-Mandeb strait, according to maritime intelligence firm Kpler. Kelanic told BBC Verify that any Houthi attacks on vessels in the Red Sea or Gulf of Aden "will suppress all international traffic not just Saudi-bound vessels". The EU's naval force in the region Aspides recommended on Wednesday that "merchant vessels linked to Israeli, US or Saudi interests avoid transiting the Red Sea and Gulf of Aden until the threat level decreases", according to an advisory seen by Reuters news agency. Ship-tracking data from MarineTraffic shows the crude oil tanker Rodos, loaded with Saudi crude, departed for India from the Red Sea port of al-Muajiz on Monday evening. The Liberian-flagged ship set off south towards the Bab al-Mandab Strait but about nine hours later made a U-turn and began sailing north instead. The Liberian-flagged oil and chemical tanker Mica departed Saudi Arabia's Jazan port on Monday afternoon and also headed south before reversing course. Ship-tracking data shows at least eight ships bound for the Red Sea have made U-turns instead of entering the Bab al-Mandab Strait from the south as well. Marshall Islands-flagged vehicle carrier Liu Jiang Kou was sailing to Saudi Arabia's Jeddah port from China before completely changing course on Monday in the Gulf of Aden. A Hong Kong-flagged crude oil tanker sailing from China called New Prime also turned around as it headed towards Saudi Arabia on Monday and now appears to be waiting in the Arabian Sea. While the reasons for each course change cannot be independently verified, "the timing is consistent with the embargo announcement," said maritime risk management company Vanguard. In an email to shipowners on Monday, which the BBC has seen, the Houthis said "vessels are banned from loading or discharging cargo at any Saudi ports". It added that ships "may be subject to targeting in any location within the operational reach".

MODELLING SCOUT LINKED TO EPSTEIN FOUND DEAD IN PARIS

A modelling scout linked to the late convicted sex offender Jeffrey Epstein has been found dead at his home. Daniel Siad, 69, was discovered on Monday in Colombes, a north-west suburb of Paris, the Nanterre prosecutor's office confirmed to the BBC. An investigation to determine the cause of death was opened on Monday evening, the office said, adding that a post-mortem examination would be carried out. Siad's name appeared thousands of times in the Epstein files released by the US government. He denied knowing of the threat Epstein had posed. His lawyer stressed that Siad, who had been the subject of several complaints in France including allegations of rape, had "never been prosecuted". "He is dead and he was innocent," Ménya Arab-Tigrine said in a statement. Epstein victim Anya - not her real name - previously told the BBC that Siad had introduced her to Epstein. "It was a complete set-up," she said, describing Siad as "essentially a professional trafficker". During one email to Epstein released in the files, Siad wrote in badly spelled English: "In This busyness I feel like fisherman some time I cache quick, some time no fish." Ahead of a BBC investigation on the subject published on Saturday, Arab-Tigrine had said her client was not available for comment. However, in a recent CNN interview, Siad said he had not known the women were being abused by Epstein. "I trusted him, I believed this guy is a professional person," he said.

Iran war has cost US $37.5bn so far, Hegseth says, as Pentagon seeks billions more

The war with Iran has cost the US some $37.5bn (£28bn) so far - an increase of nearly $8bn since the last estimate in May, Defence Secretary Pete Hegseth has said. Hegseth told the Senate Appropriations Committee it was urgent that lawmakers approve another $87bn in congressional funding for the Pentagon, with $67bn of that destined for operations in the Middle East. The hearing was disrupted several times by anti-war protesters and ended in a shouting match between the defence secretary and a senator. It was Hegseth's first appearance on Capitol Hill since hostilities between the US and Iran restarted last week and comes after three American soldiers were confirmed killed in the region. The White House asked Congress in April for $1.5tn for the Pentagon over the next fiscal year, which would raise American military spending to an all-time high in the modern era. The US carried out an 11th consecutive day of strikes on Tuesday. Iran has been retaliating with strikes of its own against the US and its allies in the Middle East. The defence secretary began Tuesday's testimony by saying, "we live in a dangerous world" and that it required bold and swift action. After being interrupted by protesters, Hegseth went on to say his funding request came at an urgent time. "Without these funds, we face critical shortfalls that threaten our ability to also simply pay our service members, rapidly replenish equipment and munitions, and sustain vital operations without disrupt-tion," Hegseth said. Every dollar appropriated, he added, would be used to build the "lethality" of US military forces and "reinforce peace through strength". Senate Appropriations Committee chairwoman Susan Collins, a Republican, questioned Hegseth over what the impact would be if the budget needs were not met. Hegseth said current and future training for military members would need to be cut without the funds, as he repeatedly blamed former President Joe Biden's administration for what he said was an underfunded military. The most senior Democrat on the committee, Patty Murray, pushed back on the funding request, saying it "does not make a lot of sense".

Harbhajan Singh Reveals
Sachin Tendulkar's Advice That Changed His Career

Former India spinner Harbhajan Singh has revealed the most valuable piece of advice he received during his illustrious career, recalling how batting great Sachin Tendulkar urged him to stay focused on cricket and ignore the distractions that come with success. Harbhajan, one of India's greatest off-spinners, said Tendulkar's words have remained with him throughout his playing career and continue to shape the advice he now gives to the next generation of cricketers. "I think our seniors were so good because they wanted us to play well and become better within our limitations. The best advice I ever got was from the great Sachin Tendulkar,"

Harbhajan told Jio Star. "Sachin paaji told me, 'There will be many distractions, many things will come your way, but you have to keep your blinders on, so that you can't look left or right, and only look straight ahead."

Seniors Struggling To Adapt, Communication
Gap Exposes Vulnerable Team India: Report

India's ODI captain Shubman Gill publicly expressed his frustration at repeated injuries after the team concluded a forgettable tour of the United Kingdom. Recurring injuries, especially hamstring injuries, have become a headache for the team management, with many feeling that there seems to be a communication gap between the Centre of Excellence (CoE) in Bengaluru, the players, and the support staff. According to a report, players are struggling to adapt to a new system following a change in personnel last year. "The flurry of recent hamstring injuries suggests that the players may not have been absolutely fit before taking the field. There seems to be a gap in communication about a player's fitness status and workload between the CoE and the team management," a BCCI source told the Times of India. In fact, the CoE is yet to appoint a head of medical staff since Nitin Patel left. "There has been no update to the SOPs drawn up in 2023. Washington Sundar, Nitish Reddy and Harshit Rana are some of the names that have been injured a little too often. The fact that Reddy worked with English coach Stefan Jones to improve his speed raised a few eyebrows. What was arguably the most surprising decision was the fact that Harshit Rana was called up by the Indian team despite not being fully fit. "Reddy worked with English bowling coach Stefan Jones to increase his pace. But that needs to be a gradual process when he is with the team leading up to a big event. Instead, he is pushing himself to bowl faster whenever he is with the team," the source said. "It's a bit concerning how Harshit was cleared by the CoE at the insistence of the team management when he had not attained his pre-knee-injury weight.

CWG 2026: WHY INDIA MIGHT
NOT EVEN GET HALF OF 61
MEDALS THEY WON IN 2022

"The 2026 Commonwealth Games have arrived, with India hoping to build on the 61 medals they previously earned. However, a significant change will be seen in the tournament this year, as the number of sports countries will be participating in has been reduced by almost half, from 19 to 10. This alteration was made after Victoria (Australia) withdrew as host for the 2026 edition of the tournament due to ballooning costs. This situation prompted Glasgow to step in with a drastically reduced budget and a streamlined 10-sport format. If we compare the 2026 edition to 2022, a total of nine sports were dropped from the roster, including almost all of India's traditional powerhouses: Wrestling: Dropped (Accounted for 12 medals in 2022, including 6 Gold) Badminton: Dropped (Accounted for 6 medals in 2022, including 3 Gold) Table Tennis: Dropped (Accounted for 7 medals, including Para TT) Hockey: Dropped (Accounted for 2 medals - Men's Silver, Women's Bronze) Cricket (Women's): Dropped (Accounted for 1 Silver) The excluded sports in Glasgow accounted for a whopping 28 of India's 61 medals in Birmingham. Hence, it is going to be tough for India to even breach the 30-medal mark this time. Where Can India's Medals Come From? Athletics is undoubtedly India's biggest bet for medals in the 2026 CWG, backed by its largest athlete contingent in Glasgow. World-class field events lead the charge, headlined by Neeraj Chopra in the men's javelin throw. Beyond throwing events, India boast have some notable athletes competing in the Games. Long-jumper Murali Sreesankar is a solid bet, alongside other prospects in the triple jump and high jump. Distance events with runners like Parul Chaudhary and Gulveer Singh can also earn India success. Weightlifting remains India's most dependable and efficient source for podium finishes. Anchored by Tokyo Olympic silver medalist and defending CWG champion Mirabai Chanu in the women's 48kg category, the lifters carry high expectations. Complementing her are contenders across both men's and women's divisions, such as Bindyarani Devi, Ajaya Babu, and Gyaneshwari Yadav, where India historically maintains a high medal-conversion rate. READ | CWG 2026: India's Full Schedule, Time In IST, Telecast, Live Streaming Boxing provides another major pillar for India's tally, with realistic opportunities across multiple weight categories. Led by Olympic medalist Lovlina Borgohain and reigning World Champion Jaismine Lamboria, India enters several women's divisions as top seeds. The overall depth in both men's and women's events does instill hope. Medals from Judo and Lawn Bowls, alongside Para Sports, can't be ruled out either.

Ravi Shastri Calls Rohit Sharma's
Lord's 138 A "Tight Slap"

The Lord's ODI between India and England was touted to be Rohit Sharma's last in the Indian shirt, but the veteran opener's valiant hundred in the match has put the retirement chatter to a halt. On Tuesday, Rohit was in the stands as The Hundred 2026 campaign kicked off with the first match between MI London and Sunrisers Leeds at the Kia Oval. Seeing Rohit watching the match at the Kia Oval, India's former coach and commentator for the match, Ravi Shastri, couldn't resist speaking about the debate around his future. Shastri didn't mince his words over the chatter around Rohit's future, saying his hundred at Lord's was a "tight slap with the bat". "Well, the hitman is in, Ravi. Yes, he'll be nice and relaxed after silencing his critics. A lot of noise made before that last one-day international, and then a reply, a nice tight slap with the bat. 138. His first hundred at Lord's. Yeah, he's seen it all, five titles for the Mumbai Indians as captain," Shastri said in the commentary box during the match. Several former cricketers have shared their opinions on the future of Rohit Sharma and Virat Kohli. Ravichandran Ashwin took a rather bold stance, saying the duo can't be touched by the selectors or the team management. "They cannot touch Virat and Rohit if they want to play. It is because of their credentials. Rohit has scored almost 12,000 runs; they cannot touch him. The other thing is that they are batters, and if you touch them, they have an army. People come to see them. If you drop them, it will just break the roof down," Ashwin said on his YouTube channel. Speaking specifically of Rohit, Ashwin said Rohit's motivation is coming from his own desire to feature at the next ODI World Cup rather than from any need to respond to the critics. "The position he is in and the way he batted, it's not that difficult for him.

"It's An Obvious Thing": Vaibhav Sooryavanshi
Opens Up On Rough Start To India Career

Indian batting prodigy Vaibhav Sooryavanshi has acknowledged that he has endured "several ups and downs" in the past four months, but his confidence remains intact heading into the T20I series against Zimbabwe, beginning here on Thursday. Riding on his IPL blitzkrieg, the 15-year-old made it to India's T20I tours of Ireland and England. Although he did not feature in the two-match series in Belfast, he made his international debut in the second T20I against England in Manchester, becoming India's youngest-ever international cricketer, eclipsing Sachin Tendulkar's long-standing record. Sooryavanshi played the next three matches but managed only modest scores and was left out of the fifth and final T20I as Sanju Samson returned to the XI. India went on to lose the series 0-4. His omission sparked criticism from several former cricketers, who questioned the team management's decision to drop the teenage opener after just three innings. "Yes, there have been several ups and down in the last four months (kaafi ups and downs aaye hain 4 mahine mein). It's part of cricket it will keep happening but I have to follow the process and give my 100 per cent for the team," Sooryavanshi, whose familiarity with the conditions here could strengthen his chances of making the playing XI for Thursday's opener, told 'bcci.tv'. The youngsters was visibly emotional after being left out of the fifth and final T20I against England. Acknowledging the challenges of dealing with setbacks at a young age, he said the support he received from those around him helped him move on and regain his focus. "It's an obvious thing that whatever I want (guidance etc), the coaches are making it available and whatever practice I require I am getting that.

INDIAN SHOOTERS
STUMBLE IN FINAL
ASIAN GAMES TUNE-UP;
CHINA SWEEPS GOLDS

Indian shooters got an early indication of the challenge that awaits them at the Asian Games in Japan less than two months from now as hosts China dominated the opening day of the ISSF World Cup on Wednesday, winning both gold medals on offer while India finished without a podium. In their final global outing before the Asian Games in Aichi-Nagoya from September 19 to October 4, the Indian shooters endured a disappointing start as neither of the country's two 10m air pistol mixed teams progressed beyond the qualification stage. The pairing of multiple World Cup gold medalist Suruchiinder Singh and Kedarling Uchaganve finished ninth with an aggregate score of 577, with Suruchi shooting 292 and Kedarling managing 285. With only the top four teams advancing, China underlined its superiority by ensuring two final spots with one of them - Yao Qianxun and Hu Kai - smashing the qualification world record with a combined 591. India's second pair of Sainyam and Kamaljeet also totalled 577 but had to settle for 11th after scores of 288 and 289 respectively. Yao and Hu went on to clinch gold with a world record score of 488.4, ahead of compatriots Shen Yiyao and Bu Shuaihang (485.7), while South Korea claimed bronze and the Individual Neutral Athletes (AIN) finished fourth. There was some encouragement in the men's 10m air rifle, where junior world champion Rakesh Parth Mane qualified second with 633.4, behind China's double Olympic champion Sheng Lihao (637.5). However, Mane was unable to sustain the momentum in the eight-man final, slipping to seventh with 145.5 as Sheng secured the gold with 253.9 ahead of compatriot Zhang Changhong (252.4). The remaining Indians also fell short, with Tushar Mane finishing 12th (630.5) and Himanshu Dhillon 22nd (629.3) in the 88-shooter field, underscoring the gulf India will have to bridge against a formidable Chinese squad before the Asian Games.

Like Tokyo Olympics, India Can End 5-Decade
WC Medal Drought: Harmanpreet Singh

Indian men's hockey captain Harmanpreet Singh believes his side is capable of ending the country's five-decade-long World Cup medal drought, saying the team heads into next month's showpiece event with the same belief and preparation that helped it end a 41-year Olympic podium wait at the Tokyo Games. India had snapped a 41-year Olympic medal drought by winning bronze in Tokyo in 2021 before repeating the feat under Harmanpreet's captaincy at the Paris Games. The ace drag-flicker now wants the team to emulate that success at the World Cup, to be held in the Netherlands and Belgium from August 15 to 30. "We had similar feelings as before the Tokyo Olympics. Our preparation is equally strong because our only goal is to end the 50-year World Cup podium drought," Harmanpreet told PTI in an interview. "Just as we won an Olympic medal after 41 years in Tokyo, we want to break the World Cup drought as well. We will go with the same mindset and the same preparation. There is no pressure; rather, it is our responsibility." India's only World Cup triumph came in Kuala Lumpur in 1975. The team had also won bronze in 1971 and silver in 1973 but has not reached the podium since. For several members of the current squad, including those who were part of India's back-to-back Olympic bronze-medal-winning campaigns, the upcoming World Cup could be their final opportunity to make an impact on the sport's biggest stage. "The team's performance, confidence and unity in recent months have strengthened our belief that this is a golden opportunity," said Harmanpreet, who has played 264 internationals for India. "It is especially important for the experienced players because this could be their last World Cup and there are expectations from them. They want to set an example through their performances and inspire the next generation." The 30-year-old, however, cautioned that success would require sustained hard work. "The path is not easy. A lot of hard work is needed. We play with a never-say-die attitude and that will remain our approach even in the practice sessions." Asked about India's realistic prospects, Harmanpreet said no team could be taken lightly in a tournament of such stature.

Bit A Modern Cinderella

With minimal yet sophisticated styling, Nidhhi strikes a balance between royal elegance and modern glamour, making every frame look effortlessly stunning. On the work front, Nidhhi was last seen in The Raja Saab, which unfortunately failed to make an impact at the box office. Despite maintaining a strong presence on social media with glamorous photoshoots, the actress currently has no officially announced upcoming film projects, leaving fans eagerly waiting for news of her next big-screen appearance.
