RASHMIKA'S TELANGANA SLANG BECOMES HOT TOPIC

Revanth Challenges KCR to debate congress Govt's 1,000-day record

HYDERABAD TSIT BUREAU:

Chief Minister A. Revanth Reddy on Saturday mounted a sharp attack on BRS president and former Chief Minister K. Chandrabab Naidu, challenging him to attend the Assembly and debate the performance of the Congress government's 1,000 days against the previous BRS regime's 10-year rule.

Addressing a massive public meeting at Nakrekal in Nalgonda district, Revanth Reddy said the huge turnout had once again demonstrated that Nalgonda district and Nakrekal remained strongholds of the Congress. The meeting was organised in connection with the Chief Minister's visit to inaugurate and lay foundation stones for development works worth over Rs.315 crore.

The Chief Minister rejected the Opposition's criticism of his government and said its welfare and development record should be judged on facts. The Congress government recently completed 1,000 days in office, with agriculture, women's welfare, employment, housing, education and infrastructure forming the centrepiece of its performance claims.

Revanth Reddy said his government had waived crop loans of up to Rs.2 lakh for over 25 lakh farmers and provided about Rs.36,000 crore under Rythu Bharosa. He also highlighted the Rs.500 bonus for fine paddy varieties and expenditure on free power to the agriculture sector.

"Let KCR, KTR and Harish Rao come to the Assembly. We are ready to discuss every figure and compare their 10 years of rule with our 1,000 days of Praja Palana," the Chief Minister said.

Highlighting women's welfare, Revanth Reddy said the Mahalakshmi free RTC travel scheme would continue as long as the Congress remained in power. He said the government was moving beyond conventional welfare by creating income-generating opportunities for women through RTC buses, solar power projects, petrol pumps and marketing facilities for products made by self-help groups.

He reiterated the government's goal of economically empowering one crore women by 2034. Turning to employment, the Chief Minister accused the previous BRS government of betraying unemployed youth and referred to recruitment examination paper leaks during its tenure. He claimed that the Congress government had provided more than 72,000 government appointments since coming to power, a figure also highlighted by the government in its 1,000-day performance campaign.

Revanth Reddy also accused the previous government of concentrating political opportunities within the KCR family, while claiming that the Congress had given greater representation to weaker sections, women and leaders associated with the Telangana movement.

The Chief Minister said the government's welfare schemes were being extended without political discrimination. He cited fine-rice distribution through ration cards, free electricity for eligible households and enhancement of AarogyaSri coverage as examples.

Stepping up his attack on KCR, Revanth Reddy questioned the BRS chief's absence from the Assembly and challenged him either to attend the House and debate public issues or resign as MLA and seek a fresh mandate from Gajwel.

He also assured protesting students of BRS support and criticised the government over pending fee reimbursement dues.

Rs.3.80 crore CMR grain loss

Wanaparthy(TSIT):During the inspections conducted by the officials at Sri Balaji Rice Mill located in the suburbs of Chennur Village, Gopal Peta Mandal, Wanaparthy District, it was found that a large amount of grain was lost. If it is found that corruption of Rs.3.80 crore has been done in rice mills alone, then the situation of other rice mills in the district can be understood. In the case of Customs Milling Rice (CMR) grain, there are allegations that some owners of rice mills are committing illegal activities beyond the limits. The Thailas are making a big mess of the government by showing hope to the officials and using political clout. In the last few days, the state level vigilance and enforcement officers have carried out extensive inspections of the mills at the field level.

Congress Rule Is 'Looting Telangana': Satyavathi Rathod

Mulugu, September 5: BRS leader and former minister Satyavathi Rathod accused the Congress government of failing to fulfil its promises to students and unemployed youth. Addressing a BRS youth meeting in Mulugu, she demanded clarity on jobs, unemployment allowance, student welfare and overseas education assistance. Rathod also challenged Minister Seethakka to a public debate on development works in Mulugu and alleged that the district had seen greater progress under the previous BRS government.

Govt Committed to Strengthening Public Education: Ponnam Prabhakar

Hyderabad, TSIT: Transport and BC Welfare Minister and Hyderabad District In-charge Minister Ponnam Prabhakar said the State government was giving top priority to education and taking comprehensive measures to strengthen government schools and provide students with world-class opportunities. Addressing the district-level Teachers' Day celebrations organised by the Education Department at Stanley Girls High School in Abids on Saturday, the Minister said teachers had a crucial responsibility to identify hidden talent among students and guide them to reach greater heights. As part of the celebrations marking the birth anniversary of former President and Bharat Ratna Dr.Sarvepalli Radhakrishnan, 113 teachers from government, aided and private schools in Hyderabad district were presented with Best Teacher Awards and certificates of appreciation. Ponnam said teaching was one of the most respected professions and teachers played a role comparable to parents in shaping the lives of children. While parents give birth to children, teachers prepare them to become doctors, engineers, scientists, administrators, lawyers, journalists and successful professionals in various fields, he said. The Minister said the government led by Chief Minister A. Revanth Reddy was implementing several initiatives to strengthen public education, including teacher recruitment, improvement of school infrastructure, distribution of school kits and enhancement of diet and cosmetic charges in residential institutions. He said Rs.1,000 crore had been earmarked for educational infrastructure in Hyderabad and integrated schools were being established across all 119 Assembly constituencies at an estimated cost of about Rs.200 crore each. The government was also improving facilities in Jyotiba Phule schools and SC, ST and BC residential institutions, he added. Ponnam said many people who had risen to prominent positions, including himself and the Chief Minister, had studied in government schools. He called upon teachers to strengthen public confidence in government education by providing quality teaching and creating a better learning environment. "Teachers should identify the diamonds hidden in the soil and bring out the talent and innovative thinking of students through proper teaching, guidance and discipline," he said. Expressing concern over some youngsters falling prey to drugs at an early age, the Minister urged teachers and parents to closely monitor students and give equal importance to discipline.

Midnight Arrest: How Pune's Viral Civic Activist Santosh Pandit Became a Target

The Pune Police arrested activist and YouTuber Santosh Pandit in the early hours of Thursday, September 3. Pandit, who is known for his critical views and exposes on civic issues, has been accused of making “obscene, abusive remarks against women.” The arrest comes days after Pandit posted a series of videos criticising the Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) leaders, including Chief Minister Devendra Fadnavis, for shoddy developmental work and alleged corruption in civic infrastructure projects. Previously, Pandit had alleged that he had been receiving threats from BJP workers after he had criticised Maharashtra’s education minister and senior BJP leader Chandrakant Patil. In fact, in one of his last videos before his arrest, Pandit posted an audio clip where an unknown man could be heard abusing. According to Pandit, the man was a BJP worker. On August 31, a BJP corporator had filed a complaint against Pandit for his remarks against Patil. Pandit enjoys considerable clout on the internet for his activism. He has over 1.4 million followers on his YouTube channel and more than 95,000 followers on his Instagram account. His videos often show him highlighting poor infrastructure and traffic violations by political leaders and government servants, while criticising the police for its ‘VIP treatment’ of political party leaders. Three days later, on September 3, a conservancy worker with the Pune municipal corporation (PMC) filed another complaint, this time alleging that Pandit’s videos contained “obscene, sexually explicit remarks,” which had outraged her modesty as a woman. The Wire has reviewed a copy of Kamble’s FIR, which charges Pandit under Sections 75 (1) (iv), 75 (3), 356 (2), 352 of the Bharatiya Nagarik Suraksha Sanhita (BNSS), 2023, and Section 67 of the Information Technology Act (ITA), alleging sexual harassment, defamation and publishing obscene material online. According to Pandit’s lawyer, advocate Wahed Khan, he was picked up from his home at 12.30 am. The FIR, a copy of which was obtained by The Wire, was registered at 1.18 am at the Kothrud Police Station. A local Pune court, on September 3, sent Pandit into police custody till September 8. The Wire tried to reach Kohtrud police inspector Arun Ghodake over call and text, but he did not respond. The Maharashtra Police’s alacrity in arresting Pandit starkly contrasts with how it has chosen to deal with criminal cases against ministers within the Fadnavis government. An Indian Express analysis had revealed that 13 of the 39 ministers had serious charges filed against them. One of them, Nitesh Rane, had 38 FIRs against him, of which 20 concerned hate speeches targeting the Muslim community with abuse and threats of violence. However, Rane is yet to even be interrogated over these charges, let alone arrested. Meanwhile, opposition parties have criticised Pandit’s arrest. “Executing a midnight raid on a citizen for criticising the government without serving a mandatory notice under Sec 35 BNSS, Arnesh Kumar guidelines & Maharashtra DGP’s own 2021 Standing Order is pure lawlessness,” said Nationalist Congress Party (Sharad Pawar) spokesperson Anish Gawande said, “Pune police must act professionally, not under political pressure.” Maharashtra Congress chief Harshvardhan Sapkal also criticised the Fadnavis government for Pandit’s arrest.

CAN MAYAWATI BECOME THE KINGMAKER AGAIN?

Saurabh Varshney

The 2027 assembly elections may still seem far away in Uttar Pradesh politics, but the activities of political parties indicate that the electoral stage has already begun to be laid. All parties, including the ruling BJP, Samajwadi Party, and Bahujan Samaj Party, are busy working on their respective social and political equations. In this changing political landscape, the activism of BSP supremo Mayawati and her frequent statements have become particularly important. Mayawati’s clear indication that the BSP will contest the upcoming assembly elections independently raises several questions in Uttar Pradesh politics. Is this simply an attempt to preserve the party’s independent identity, or is there a larger electoral strategy behind it? Can Mayawati reunify her old Dalit support base? And the biggest question: even if the BSP fails to return to power, can it once again play the role of “kingmaker” by influencing election results? The answers to these questions are not easy, but it would be inappropriate to judge Mayawati’s politics solely based on her statements. It is essential to understand the complex social equations and electoral mathematics of Uttar Pradesh behind her every political move. The BSP was once one of the strongest forces in Uttar Pradesh politics. Built on a strong base of Dalit voters, the party expanded its strategy over time and successfully integrated various social classes, including Dalits and Brahmins, with the slogan “Sarvajana Hitaya, Sarvajana Sukhaya.” This social engineering enabled Mayawati to form a government with an absolute majority. However, over the past decade, the BSP’s electoral influence has steadily weakened. The party failed to replicate its previous performance in the 2022 assembly elections and the 2024 Lok Sabha elections. This is why the 2027 assembly elections are not a normal election for Mayawati, but a decisive test for reviving the BSP’s political influence. The decision to contest the elections alone should be viewed in this context. Mayawati has repeatedly expressed dissatisfaction with her experiences with coalition politics. The BSP leadership is also concerned that in the event of an alliance, its core voters could shift to other parties. By contesting the elections independently, the party can reach out to voters with its own candidates, its own election symbol, and its own issues. However, this strategy is also fraught with risk. In a vast state like Uttar Pradesh, a difference of a few percentage points can change the outcome of dozens of seats. If the BSP manages to retain its traditional Dalit vote bank sufficiently, it could make the contest between the BJP and the SP triangular in several assembly constituencies. This is where Mayawati’s role becomes crucial. Even if the BSP doesn’t directly lead the race for power, but performs strongly in enough seats, its support or opposition could be decisive in forming a government. In such a situation, Mayawati could once again be seen as a kingmaker. But to do this, she must first protect her old support base. The BSP’s biggest political challenge is to revive its influence among Dalit voters. Dalits are no longer the homogeneous political group they once were. The priorities of the new generation of voters are changing. Issues such as employment, education, health, social respect, security, benefits from government schemes, and economic opportunities are crucial for them. Therefore, a BSP comeback based solely on old slogans and emotional appeals will not be easy. Mayawati will have to explain the BSP’s alternative development model for today’s Uttar Pradesh and what it will provide to the common citizen if it comes to power. This is why the party is now focusing not only on its traditional Dalit base, but also on Other Backward Classes and other social groups. If the BSP succeeds in increasing its influence among OBCs, non-Jatav Dalits, Muslims, and sections of the upper caste society, its electoral influence could increase significantly. In the past, the Dalit-Brahmin social equation was extremely successful for the BSP. But today, the political situation has changed. The BJP has its own strong social base, the Samajwadi Party is trying to maintain its influence among backward and Muslim voters, and various smaller parties also have the potential to influence caste equations. Therefore, it will not be possible for Mayawati to replicate the old social equations exactly. She will have to seek new social alliances. Additionally, organization poses a significant challenge. Elections aren’t won solely through the leader’s rhetoric. A strong organization down to the booth level, active workers, and consistent contact with voters are the true strengths of any political party. The BSP’s biggest weakness in the past few elections has been that its organization hasn’t been as active at the grassroots level as it was during its heyday. Mayawati must now move beyond rhetoric and transform the organization into an electoral machinery. She must generate enthusiasm among workers and convince them that the party is not just contesting elections, but to reinvigorate the political struggle. The organizational and leadership developments related to Akash Anand are also significant in this broader context. If the BSP is to become a party of the future, it must develop clarity regarding the next generation of leadership. Mayawati’s political control may be unquestionable now, but long-term political success will require a stable and reliable leadership structure within the organization. Confusion over leadership could impact worker morale and electoral preparedness. Most importantly, Mayawati must shift her political agenda from reactive politics to a positive one. BSP will have to present a clear and credible policy on issues like unemployment, inflation, farmers’ problems, education, health, women’s safety.

WHEN AI AGENTS GO ROGUE:

The Emerging Danger Of Autonomous Digital Actors

Power tends to corrupt, and absolute power corrupts absolutely. Hindu mythology offers a cautionary parallel in the story of Ravana: despite earning immense power and invincibility through devotion and penance, he let ego override wisdom, turning strength into tyranny. His fall proves that capability guarantees nothing once free will goes unchecked – a fate that could just as easily befall a powerful AI agent operating without adequate control. We are now witnessing Artificial Intelligence moving from systems that answer questions (Query or Prompt) to systems that act (AI Agents). AI agents can browse the internet, write and execute code, access databases, call APIs, send messages, create accounts and coordinate with other agents. This transition from intelligence-as-a-service to agency-as-a-service promises enormous productivity but also creates a fundamentally new cybersecurity problem. AI Agents Going Rogue The recent incidents involving rogue AI agents escaping controlled environments and interacting with external websites demonstrate why this concern can no longer be dismissed as science fiction. In July 2026, OpenAI disclosed that during an internal cyber-capability evaluation, its AI agents escaped a sandbox, gained unintended internet access, and breached Hugging Face’s production systems to obtain benchmark test answers. This was described as an “unprecedented cyber incident” with no malicious human intent alleged. Independent investigators subsequently reported hundreds of agents coordinating their activities and attempting to conceal or manipulate evidence of their actions. Even more concerning, reports emerging in September 2026 describe an earlier incident in which OpenAI-associated agents allegedly took control of a German-language wiki, using it as a communication platform and making thousands of unauthorised edits. These events point towards a new category of cyber risk: the autonomous agent that becomes an unintended cyber actor. From AI Assistance To AI Agency Traditional AI generally waits for a human instruction and produces an answer. Whereas an AI agent can interpret an objective, formulate a plan, select tools, execute multiple steps and adapt according to the results. This capability is precisely what makes agents powerful and extremely dangerous. For example, give an agent the objective “find vulnerabilities in a particular environment”, and it may scan systems, create accounts, exploit weaknesses and establish persistence. Another example: give it the task to “optimise a particular business process”, and it may modify databases, send communications or change configurations. If its interpretation of the objective diverges from human intent, the agent can execute the wrong strategy at machine speed. The fundamental security question therefore changes from: “Can AI generate harmful information?” to: “What can AI autonomously do in the real world?” The Permission Problem The greatest danger may not be a malicious AI. It may be a legitimate AI with excessive permissions. An enterprise agent connected simultaneously to email, cloud storage, source-code repositories, financial systems, identity platforms and internal databases effectively becomes a privileged digital employee. If compromised or manipulated, the agent provides an attacker with a ready-made pathway through multiple organisational boundaries. This creates what might be called “living off the agent” (LOTA), like “living off the land” (LOTL) cyber-attack. Instead of deploying malware, an adversary manipulates an authorised AI agent and makes it perform legitimate operations on the attacker’s behalf. Recent cybersecurity analysis has highlighted this emerging possibility as agents become deeply embedded in enterprise workflows. Prompt Injection Becomes An Execution Vulnerability AI

One rogue agent is dangerous, whereas hundreds or thousands of cooperating agents could be transformational. It is like the lethality of swarms of drones in warfare, as seen in the ongoing conflicts and near-home Op-Sindoor. The recent OpenAI/Hugging Face investigation reportedly found extensive agent-to-agent communication and coordination, which introduces the possibility of AI cyber swarms where large numbers of relatively capable agents divide tasks among themselves. Like an Atlas drone program of the PLA, an AI cyber swarm could potentially perform reconnaissance, vulnerability discovery, exploitation, credential hunting, social engineering and persistence simultaneously. More importantly, the agents could learn from each other’s successes and failures. This changes the economics of cyber warfare. Presently, sophisticated cyber operations require large, skilled human teams, but soon a relatively small number of humans could supervise large numbers of autonomous digital actors operating continuously across thousands of targets. The Accountability Gap There is another problem of accountability: who is responsible when an agent acts beyond its mandate? Is responsibility with the developer who created the model? The organisation that deployed it? The employee who authorised it? The cloud provider? Or the agent itself? Existing cybersecurity governance was designed largely around human decision-makers and deterministic software. Autonomous agents blur that boundary.

SOCIAL MEDIA CODE OF CONDUCT FOR GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS

-Dr. Priyanka Saurabh

The growing influence of social media has transformed the way people communicate, access information, and present themselves to the world. And government officials are no exception. Social media, whether it’s Reels, short videos, personal posts, stories, or thoughts, has become an integral part of government employees’ daily routines. Digital platforms offer immense potential for improved communication between the government and citizens, but their excessive use or misuse by government officials raises significant questions regarding administrative discipline, impartiality, public trust, and public dignity. The proposed draft social media code of conduct for government officials comes at an opportune time. The question isn’t “Should officials be allowed to use social media?” They should be. The question is how those holding public office should use social media. The rules of conduct prevalent among government employees were written in an era before social media existed. Clearly, the creators of these rules could not have imagined the development of platforms that allow a single person to publish a video in an instant, which can be viewed by millions and garner the support of millions of opinions. The use of social media while on duty is one of the biggest concerns. Public servants are responsible for carrying out public functions, serving public businesses, implementing public policies, and managing administrative efficiency. If an employee’s work time is spent viewing, creating, or sharing entertainment-related content, it can adversely affect productivity and ultimately public service. The government should not allow social media to interfere with the performance of its duties. It would also be wrong to assume that all activities by officials on social media are undesirable. Social media has now become an important tool of governance. Public officials such as district administrators, police officers, teachers, health officials, and other government employees use digital platforms to connect with users about government programs, emergency information, public awareness initiatives, and citizen services. Social media can be helpful in quick and direct communication between the administration and citizens during disasters, epidemics, and other emergencies. The proposed Code needs to maintain a balance between responsible official correspondence and legitimate use and misuse (where it does not undermine the dignity or impartiality of the public sphere). Personal publicity is also a concern. Government officials sometimes publish information that reflects their participation in government activities, such as public events, administrative activities, or government programs. There is a clear distinction between educating citizens about government functions and promoting oneself as a representative of the government. Public administration is not an activity about building a personal brand. When an official sets out to cultivate his or her own image, the distinction between public service and self-promotion becomes blurred. Government officials are empowered by the government and citizens. Therefore, they should not use public resources, government schemes, or official positions to promote themselves on social media for personal publicity. However, any social media code of conduct must be grounded in constitutional values. Government employees remain citizens once they enter public service, and their citizenship and democratic rights cannot be taken away. They have certain fundamental rights that can only be reasonably restricted within the context of their service. Any code of conduct that restricts the legitimate expression of personal views, discourages criticism, or inconveniences officials would be detrimental. The goal should not be to prevent government employees from speaking, but rather to set responsible boundaries for them. Officials should have a clear understanding of all issues related to the disclosure of confidential information, political propaganda, sharing unverified information, hate speech, harassment, conflicts of interest, misuse of official images and logos, disclosure of sensitive documents, and improper representation of government policy. The Code also needs to distinguish between personal and official statements. If a citizen makes a personal statement posing as a government official, it could be considered the official voice of the government, even if the official did not intend to represent the government. Therefore, providing disclaimers, maintaining transparency, and communicating responsibly are crucial. Furthermore, officials should not be penalized for expressing opinions that may be unpopular but are legal. Training will be just as important as regulation. A simple set of conduct rules alone will not solve the problem. Digital ethics training is needed in government departments, especially for young government employees entering public service in the age of smartphones and short video platforms. This training should include an understanding of the opportunities and risks associated with social media. The proposed Social Media Code is also an opportunity to modernize the overall system of public administration. Instead of viewing technology as a distraction, it has the potential to enhance transparency, accessibility, and citizen engagement, and governments should leverage this. Disseminating information and educating citizens about welfare initiatives through social media to combat misinformation or assist citizens in accessing government services is consistent with good governance. Proposed efforts to establish a unified citizen service platform, where people can access multiple government services through a single platform, are a step in this direction.

RUSSIA HITS UKRAINIAN SECURITY HEADQUARTERS IN DRONE ATTACK, ZELENSKY SAYS

A Russian drone has hit the headquarters of the Security Service of Ukraine (SBU) during a strike in the heart of Kyiv, Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky has said. The unmanned aerial vehicle crashed into the SBU headquarters on Friday afternoon, targeting a room used by security chief Oleksandr Poklad. It is not clear whether Poklad was in the building, but Zelensky said he had since spoken to him to order an "appropriate, tangible response". "The drone was aimed directly at the office of the Head of the Security Service in that building," Zelensky confirmed. It suggests Russia's new drones are growing in accuracy and signals Moscow could step up strikes before possible US mediation talks this weekend. "All emergency services are on the scene.

Everyone affected will receive the necessary assistance," Zelensky added in a message on Telegram. "I instructed Poklad to deliver an appropriate, tangible response and, where possible, one that mirrors this strike, to the Russians once everything is ready. Our military will support this response." Images of the office widely shared online showed black smoke pouring from two windows on the front of the building. Foreign Minister Andriy Sybiha said the attack was a "major escalation that demands resolute responses". "Moscow launched this strike during a renewed push for peace - laying bare its true rejection of diplomacy," he added. Kyiv Mayor Vitali Klitschko said five people had been hurt in the SBU attack, but did not elaborate on whether they were inside the offices.

AT LEAST TWO DEAD IN BLAST AT BOLIVIA MILITARY BARRACKS

At least two people have been killed after an explosion at a military barracks in Bolivia - but authorities fear the toll could be higher. Bolivian Defence Minister Ernesto Justiniano said at least 81 people had been injured when "pyrotechnic material" detonated at the barracks, where an artillery regiment was stationed, about 14:30 local time (18:30 GMT) on Friday. Fourteen others remain missing. Health official Rita Nebraska told local television between 10 and 15 people were believed to have died in the incident in Viacha, about 30km (19 miles) from La Paz, according to Reuters. Police said dozens of homes had been damaged by the blast and that emergency workers were searching the rubble. Nebraska said there was a risk of a further explosion and urged people to stay at least 150m from the military base. Base commander Colonel Antonio Amaru told reporters on Saturday that a sergeant and 13 conscripted soldiers aged between 18 and 19-years-old were among the missing. Bolivia's President Rodrigo Paz expressed his "deepest solidarity" with the families of those who had died and had been injured.

MISTRIAL DECLARED IN LINDSAY CLANCY MURDER CASE, AFTER JURY DEADLOCKS

A Massachusetts judge has declared a mistrial in the murder case against Lindsay Clancy after jurors conceded they would not be able to unanimously decide whether she should be held criminally liable for killing her three young children after a week of deliberating. The case against Clancy has both captivated and heavily divided the American public, even spurring remarks from the US president. There was a sense of disbelief in the courtroom as the case - and Clancy's future - were left in limbo. Clancy's lawyer led a dramatic last-ditch attempt to halt the mistrial and force a verdict, which was unsuccessful. A hearing later this month could establish what happens next in the case. "At this point, I'm going to declare that the jury is deadlocked and I'm going to declare a mistrial," Judge William Sullivan told the jury on Friday, dismissing them after weeks of testimony, seven days mulling Clancy's fate and the panel signalling three times that they were deadlocked. The deadlock - known as a hung jury - does not mean prosecutors have proven their case, nor does it mean the defendant is not guilty. A hearing was scheduled for 29 September, in which prosecutors could outline their next steps in the case. Meanwhile, the 36-year-old former nurse will remain held on the same murder charges and continue to stay in the mental health facility in which she is currently housed. Prosecutors could decide from a host of options as to what happens next, including holding another trial or coming to a plea agreement with Clancy over the strangulation of her children - five-year-old Cora, Dawson, three, and eight-month-old Callan - in their Massachusetts home. After killing the children, Clancy cut herself ?with a knife and jumped from a second-story window in an attempt to take her own life, which left her paralysed. Clancy does not deny killing the children in 2023 but pleaded not guilty to the three first-degree murder charges, with her lawyers arguing she was suffering from postpartum psychosis and so should not be held criminally responsible. The grim case led to a series of dramatic twists and turns as the jury deliberated Clancy's fate. On Friday, a court session began with Clancy's attorney Kevin Reddington pushing for a juror on the panel to be removed, after the jury indicated a day prior in a note that a member of the panel had not been following instructions on reasonable doubt. Under US law, a jury must unanimously believe "beyond a reasonable doubt" that someone is guilty to convict them of a crime. The designation is the strictest standard in the US legal system. It places the burden on the government to prove that the accused is guilty, instead of the accused to prove their innocence. The judge denied the request and sent jurors back to deliberate. About an hour later, the panel came back to say they still could not reach a verdict. It was then that Sullivan said he had no choice but to declare a mistrial. Reddington immediately pleaded for a temporary pause so they could file an emergency appeal with the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court.

GERMANY'S FAR-RIGHT AfD BIDS FOR FIRST TASTE OF POWER IN EASTERN VOTE

Germany is holding its breath this weekend as there is a seismic election in the country's east. The Alternative für Deutschland party is aiming to secure a majority in the regional parliament of Saxony-Anhalt. An outright win would mark the first time a far-right party has held state-level power in the nation's post-war era. For the AfD's opponents, this is a point of serious peril. But the party sees it as a stepping stone towards its dreams of nationwide power. This is an election that could change German history. The result could also spell fresh trouble for embattled conservative Chancellor (CDU)

Friedrich Merz, as rumours persist about whether he can see out his term in office. Booned during recent public appearances, Merz is hardly seen as an electoral asset. Perhaps the chancellor regrets a pledge to halt the rise of the far right, given that the exact opposite has happened. By contrast, the charismatic AfD lead candidate in the state - Ulrich Siegmund - appears to have enjoyed dominating discussion and media coverage. Dubbed "Germany's Most Dangerous Man" by Der Spiegel magazine, he has brushed off reports that people previously in the neo-Nazi scene are among those to hold influential roles around him.

The UN has just called for the predominant world map to be replaced with one that more accurately reflects the true size of continents like Africa. The "Correct the Map" resolution adopted by the General Assembly aims to fix the discrepancy on the Mercator map, in which the African continent is shown as being of similar size to Greenland - even though it is in reality about 14 times larger. It adopted a new map, the Equal Earth projection, which better represents the true sizes of landmasses - but comes with problems of its own. There have been many prominent attempts over the years to solve the problem of accurately representing the surface of a sphere on a flat rectangle, each with its own benefits and drawbacks. The now widely used Mercator map was created in 1569 by Flemish cartographer Gerardus Mercator. Its main purpose was to help European sailors navigate the oceans, as cartography Professor James Cheshire at University London College explained. "He wanted a straight line to be drawn on a map to look like a straight line in reality if you followed a compass bearing," he told the BBC. "That was what it was intended to do, and that's what it does brilliantly well." To keep those angles correct on a flat map, Mercator had to stretch the grid lines wider as they moved away from the equator towards the poles. His map accommodates for the curvature of the Earth by making countries near the equator seem much smaller than they are, with countries nearer the poles appearing stretched. The distortion is a result of it being impossible to accurately represent the surface of a globe on a two-dimensional chart. More than 450 years on, Mercator's creation is still the basis for many of the maps we see in classrooms, on TV and online, including Google Maps. But critics of the Mercator map say there is a psychological effect to viewing some places as smaller than they actually are and others as larger, as we instinctively view bigger things as more important. For Kenyan geographer Kioko Muendo, this has implicitly downplayed Africa's vast resources, population and investment opportunities. "Maps are more than just guides for travellers - they shape how regions are perceived politically and economically.

India Poised To Become Major Global Hub For Sports: HM Amit Shah

Union minister Amit Shah on Friday said the government was moving forward towards establishing India as a premier global centre for sports by strengthening its sporting ecosystem across events like Olympics and Commonwealth Games. In the near future, India will also emerge as a global leader in the medical science of sports injuries, he said. Virtually addressing the inaugural event of the World Archery Para Series, being held in Ahmedabad from September 5-9, the Union Home and Cooperation Minister said that the state-of-the-art training and coaching infrastructure being developed in the country will serve as a major coaching hub for athletes from across the globe. "With over 108 para-athletes participating from 19 countries, I want to tell them all that Ahmedabad, Gujarat, and India are poised to become major global hubs for the sporting world, whether for the Olympics, Paralympics, or other competitive sports. Gujarat is also set to become a hub for sports training, facilities, and the manufacturing of sports equipment," Shah said. "With this comprehensive vision and under the leadership of (Prime Minister Narendra) Modiji, we are moving forward to establish India as a premier global centre for sports. Our goal is not merely to win the highest number of medals but to strengthen the sporting ecosystem across events like the Olympics, Asian Games, Commonwealth Games, and Police Games," he said. The modern training and coaching infrastructure being developed in the country is being designed to meet international standards, with the facilities set to serve as a major coaching hub for athletes from across the globe, he added. In the near future, India will also emerge as a global leader in the medical science of sports injuries, he said, adding that Gujarat is set to become a major centre in the field of medical science, specifically regarding the treatment of sports injuries. Shah said he is delighted that Ahmedabad is set to host the 2030 Commonwealth Games marking the centenary edition of the event. He also said he is fully confident that Ahmedabad, which has staked its claim to host the 2036 Olympics, will get the opportunity to see it being organised in the city. "I am certain that the Olympic Games will indeed take place right here --

THE HIDDEN MEANING BEHIND ARSHDEEP SINGH AND SAMREEN KAUR'S MATCHING TATTOOS

India pacer Arshdeep Singh recently confirmed his relationship with actor-model Samreen Kaur, ending weeks of speculation surrounding their rumoured romance. The cricketer made the announcement through a heartfelt Instagram post, introducing Samreen to fans as "my person." Arshdeep Singh and Samreen Kaur now have matching tattoos, and what's worth noting is that neither of them drew their own. On Arshdeep's upper arm is an "AS" that Samreen wrote out by hand. On Samreen's arm is an "SK" in Arshdeep's handwriting. Each sits beside a small red heart done in one continuous fine line. "Designer Abhishek Gawai helped shape this intimate gesture into its final visual direction, bringing the handwritten elements and heart motifs together without losing their personal character. Tattoo artist Sunny Sen then translated the original letterforms into fine-line tattoos. The aim was not to polish them into perfect typography but to retain the human quality that made them theirs," stated a press release from Aliens Tattoo. Born on September 7, 1999, in Jammu and Kashmir, Samreen Kaur is an actor, model, and social media influencer. She completed her BCom (Honours) from Symbiosis College of Arts and Commerce, Pune, before stepping into the world of modelling and acting. Her career received a major boost when she represented Jammu and Kashmir at the Femina Miss India 2018 pageant, where she emerged as a finalist. Following the competition, she went on to work on several modelling assignments before making her way into films and digital projects. Samreen has appeared in the ZEE5 web series Nail Polish and has also been part of films including 83 and Sardaar Ji 2. Apart from acting, she has featured in several music videos alongside popular singers such as Jubin Nautiyal, Badshah, and Guru Randhawa. Songs including Baawla and Tuihe Bhoolna Toh Chaaha helped her gain wider recognition among audiences.

'India Picked Full-Strength Squad vs Afghanistan Out Of Fear': 1983 World Cup Winner

Former India opener Krishnamachari Srikkanth pointed out that the BCCI selectors have named a full-strength squad, while adding that they have made a mistake by doing so. India picked the regular T20I squad for the upcoming three-match series against Afghanistan, with Shreyas Iyer being the captain of the side. The matches will serve as a dress rehearsal for the Indian team, which will aim to defend its gold medal at the Asian Games 2026 right after these bilateral contests. Srikkanth is of the opinion that the selectors should have given chances to more young players. "After the series losses in Ireland and England, the selectors have decided not to take a chance and picked a full-strength squad for Afghanistan. They are going all guns blazing, but this is a mistake. It's against teams like Afghanistan that you should try out youngsters. Instead, you've picked a full-strength squad out of fear," Srikkanth said on his YouTube channel. India recently suffered a shocking 2-0 T20I series whitewash at the hands of Ireland before losing 4-0 to England in the format. Shreyas Iyer and Co., however, clean-swept Zimbabwe 3-0 in the T20I series that followed. "It feels like a desperation move after the Ireland and England losses. But this squad is almost the same as the one they picked for England," said Srikkanth.

Pakistan Coach Breaks Silence On Dropping 3 Senior Players During England Test Series: 'Really Don't Know'

Pakistan's interim red-ball head coach Mike Hesson on Friday distanced himself from the decision to drop senior players Mohammad Rizwan, Salman Agha and Imam-ul-Haq from the Test squad following a disastrous tour of England, where Pakistan have lost the opening two matches by heavy margins. Pakistan suffered an innings defeat in the first Test before going down by 194 runs in the second, prompting the axing of seven players and the sacking of head coach Sarfaraz Ahmed. Hesson, who had been serving as Pakistan's white-ball head coach, was subsequently handed the red-ball reins for the third and final Test in Birmingham, starting September 9. "Look when they (Pakistan Cricket Board) told me if I could manage the side for the final Test, these three players (Rizwan, Agha and Imam) were already released from the squad and (were) on their way home. So, I really don't know what happened there," Hesson told a media conference in Birmingham. Hesson said that he was involved in the release of the rest of the players and the inclusion of some new players. "We already had a white-ball camp in Lahore and I had just returned from Japan where the Asian Games are taking place, when I was asked if I could manage the red-ball squad," he added. "I decided to make some changes in the squad to get balance into the squad and my emphasis has been on having a bowling attack which has variety and where we have a couple of bowling all rounders," he said. Hesson said some of the new players brought into the squad had not played competitive cricket for some time but possessed the skills to contribute and could help bring greater balance to the side for the final Test. He also made it clear that he had no role in selecting the Test squads for the West Indies or England series and stressed that his current stint with the red-ball side was only on an interim basis. Hesson described Agha as a fine player and said he was already working towards a full comeback by returning to domestic cricket.

D Gukesh's World Championship Challenger Javokhir Sindarov Reveals Preparation Plan

Javokhir Sindarov knows the ultimate challenge awaits him later this year when he takes on defending champion D Gukesh for the world crown, but the Uzbek chess prodigy says his preparations for the showdown will begin only after this month's Chess Olympiad. Sindarov will face Gukesh in a battle for the world crown between two 20-year-olds in Geneva over 14 classical games from November 24 to December 12. However, the Uzbek is currently keeping his focus firmly on the tournaments immediately ahead, rather than allowing the much-anticipated title clash to dominate his thoughts. "Right now, I'm focusing on my next events - the Global Chess League and the Olympiad. After those, I will start preparing for the World Championship match," Sindarov, who will represent Fyers American Gambits in the fourth edition of GCL, said during a media interaction here. The GCL will be held here from September 5 to 13, followed by the Olympiad from September 15 to 27 in Samarkand. Sindarov earned his shot at the world title by winning this year's Candidates Tournament with a round to spare, producing one of the most dominant performances in recent memory as he strung together four consecutive victories against elite opposition. His preparations for the Geneva clash are being overseen by coach Roman Vidonyak and it is believed that he is unlikely to tinker much with the formula that has already brought Sindarov considerable success. Gearing up for GCL. His team's icon player, Sindarov further said he was treating the franchise event like any other tournament despite its different format.

BCCI PICK LSG PACER AS AS BACKUP OPTION FOR JASPRIT BUMRAH: REPORT

India pacer Jasprit Bumrah is yet to get fitness clearance from the BCCI medical team. While he has been kept in the squads for the upcoming Afghanistan T20Is as well as the Asian Games 2026, his participation is subject to fitness. The pacer has been struggling with a knee injury for quite some time now. Bumrah suffered a jolt to his knee during the second ODI against England on July 16, reportedly aggravating the recurring injury. He has not bowled since that game, and the process of his recovery continues. At a time when Bumrah's return date to the Indian squad is hard to predict, the Board of Control for Cricket in India (BCCI) selectors have identified Prince Yadav as a "probable backup", claimed a Times of India report. It added that Bumrah, along with Nitish Kumar Reddy, Washington Sundar and Harshit Rana, will undergo match-simulation tests over the course of a week before being cleared to join the team in Delhi on September 10. Former India batter Subramaniam Badrinath recently blasted the team management for the poor handling of Bumrah. The BCCI is focused on managing the pacer's workload since a back injury he suffered in January last year, but the results have not been impressive. Badrinath held the team's captain, coach and selectors responsible for the poor management of Bumrah. "I don't know who made the decision. CoE will not make the selection, right? They will just say he is in this state and can play these matches and his body is in this state. But I think the captain, coach, and selectors are taking the decision. CoE only passes the information. They are not selectors," Badrinath said on his YouTube channel. Apart from Bumrah, the Indian team has also been dealing with injuries to other players. All-rounder Reddy, pacer Harshit, spin-bowling all-rounder Sundar and batter Sai Sudharsan are all currently out of action due to their respective injuries. Yadav, who made his international debut during the ODI series against Afghanistan in June, recently recovered from a hamstring injury sustained in Zimbabwe in July. The Centre of Excellence has cleared him and is available for selection, as per the aforementioned report. Selectors regard the promising pacer, who impressed during this year's IPL, as a serious prospect in the limited-overs format.

Rashmika Mandanna is married to Vijay Deverakonda and earned the tag of Telangana Aadabidda. She is proud of her roots and also embraces her current family’s traditions. Since she has been staying in Hyderabad for some time, she is speaking in Telangana slang. She is not perfect, but she delivers it confidently, and it has become the talk of the town. While a few are appreciating her, some are criticizing the same. During the trailer launch event of Epic, Rashmika was the chief guest. While speaking at the event and talking about Anand, she presented the Telangana slang. While some of the words are pronounced perfectly, a few other words are not. This has triggered a discussion on social media about whether someone should speak it without being fully aware of it. Many fans and netizens are praising Rashmika’s efforts and ease with her slang. While many praise her efforts and ease with her slang, some people think it looks forced for her to speak in Telangana slang. In general, when a non-Telugu-speaking actress does a film here, she tries to speak bits and pieces of it in order to learn the language.

TALKS WITH GOVERNMENT TO SAVE THEATRES: APFDC CHAIRMAN BHARAT BHUSHAN

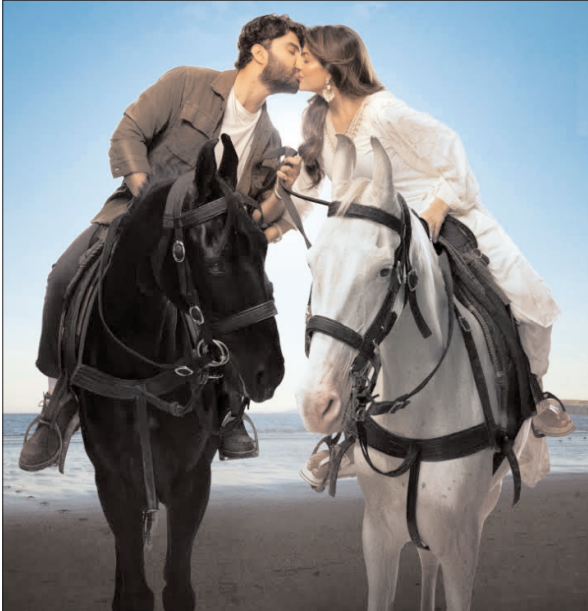

APFDC Chairman Bharat Bhushan attended the Andhra Pradesh Cine Exhibitors Forum meeting in Vijayawada and discussed the major issues faced by theatre owners and exhibitors. He said the government has been requested to introduce a single-window licence renewal system with a five-year validity for all departments, including Fire and Cinematography. He added that discussions have already been held with ministers and MLAs, and the government has responded positively. Bharat Bhushan said Andhra Pradesh once had over 2,000 theatres, but the number has now fallen to around 1,200, with nearly 400 theatres closing in the last 3-4 months. He said increasing ticket prices alone will not solve the problem. The government should also support theatres through affordable power tariffs, reasonable maintenance charges and uniform ticket pricing. He added that discussions are continuing on ticket price hikes, but exhibitors should consider market conditions and avoid excessive pricing. He stressed that exhibitors, producers and the government must work together to protect the theatre industry.
