India well placed amid global AI risks, strong fundamentals offer resilience: RBI Governor

New Delhi, Oct 3 : A correction in elevated artificial intelligence (AI)-related valuations in advanced economies could potentially benefit India by diverting capital flows towards domestic markets despite a slowdown in global investment cycle, Reserve Bank of India (RBI) Governor Sanjay Malhotra said on Saturday.

Speaking at the Kautilya Economic Conclave 2026 here, Malhotra said the AI investment boom has been a major driver of global financial markets in recent years.

However, he stated that any moderation in AI-related investment or earnings could lead to a significant repricing of financial assets linked to the sector.While such a correction may pose risks for global markets, it could have a favourable impact on India, the RBI Governor said.

"If corrections in AI-related valuations were to happen in advanced countries, it may have a positive impact in terms of capital inflows," says Malhotra. He further stated that Indian equity markets had already undergone a correction from elevated valuations in recent months but described the adjustment as orderly.

The RBI Governor also identified AI-related valuation excesses as one of five key concerns facing the international financial system. The other risks include elevated global debt levels, leverage in the non-bank financial sector, growing private credit exposures and cybersecurity threats, according to him.

Meanwhile, he stressed that these vulnerabilities do not indicate immediate financial stress.

"It is not that I see any imminent signs of stress, but we need to remain alert to these risks," he says.

The country was navigating a challenging global environment from a position of strength, supported by sound macroeconomic fundamentals and resilient balance sheets across banks and non-bank financial institutions. While acknowledging that the country remains vulnerable to external shocks through commodity prices, global financial conditions and capital flows, he said the domestic financial system continues to demonstrate resilience.

"Strong macroeconomic fundamentals and the resilience of the financial system provide confidence in our ability to withstand these lingering shocks," he said. According to the RBI Governor, the most immediate concern is regarding cyber risk.

Advanced viral sequencing may help identify hidden causes of unexplained hepatitis

New Delhi, Oct 2: Advanced viral sequencing may help identify infections missed by conventional diagnostic tests in some cases of hepatitis of unknown origin, according to a study involving 49 patients in China.

Researchers at Beijing Ditan Hospital detected hepatitis C virus (HCV) in one patient whose initial antibody and RNA tests were negative. Subsequent testing confirmed an acute HCV infection, allowing the case to be reclassified. However, the study did not identify any common novel pathogen among the wider group of patients.

The study included 48 adults and one 16-year-old adolescent who were enrolled between June and December 2024. All participants had undergone initial investigations that ruled out recognised causes of hepatitis, including hepatitis A–E, alcohol-related liver disease, drug-induced liver injury, autoimmune hepatitis, metabolic disorders and biliary obstruction.

Researchers analysed 59 clinical specimens, including 44 plasma and 15 faecal samples, using targeted RNA sequencing and unbiased metagenomic sequencing. The targeted approach screened for 139 viruses, while metagenomic sequencing examined a broader range of viral genetic material. Targeted sequencing detected HCV in one plasma sample. The patient had initially tested negative for HCV antibodies and RNA and had been diagnosed with hepatitis of unknown origin.

Further metagenomic sequencing identified a near-complete HCV genome covering 94.5 per cent of the reference sequence. Follow-up testing 14 days later confirmed HCV RNA positivity, with a viral load of 420,000 IU/mL, along with antibody seroconversion. The findings established that the patient had an early HCV infection that had not been detected during the initial testing.

Metagenomic sequencing also detected hepatitis B virus sequences in another patient despite negative conventional HBV testing at enrolment. Researchers suggested this could represent occult HBV infection, although they could not establish whether it was responsible for the hepatitis.

A goose circovirus-like sequence was identified in one faecal sample, but there is currently no evidence that the virus causes hepatitis in humans. An additional low-level influenza A-like signal was detected in one plasma sample, but it could not be confirmed through follow-up PCR testing.

Overall, the researchers found no common pathogenic virus that could explain the unexplained hepatitis cases in the cohort.The study also found differences in viral signals between plasma and faecal samples, suggesting that testing multiple sample types could provide complementary information.

These consumer segments are increasingly seeking quick, affordable food options that combine the convenience of international fast-food formats with familiar Indian flavours. Commenting on the expansion, Nitin Rana, Co-founder of Burger Singh, said, "Hyderabad has embraced Burger Singh with great enthusiasm, and we see significant headroom for growth. Scaling from two to 12 stores within six months reflects our strong confidence in the city's appetite for high-quality, homegrown burger options. Hyderabad is central to our broader strategy of building a robust national footprint across high-opportunity regions."

For its upcoming locations, Burger Singh plans to target high-footfall commercial and residential hubs across the city. The expansion will include a mix of company-operated and franchisee-owned stores, with the initial investment for a new outlet starting at approximately 30 lakh. Through its franchise model, the brand aims to accelerate its market reach while creating opportunities for local entrepreneurs.

Having established a strong foundation across North India, Burger Singh is now expanding its focus on South India. The company is targeting high-demand markets across the region where organised QSR concepts are gaining traction and where its India-inspired menu resonates with local consumer preferences. The Hyderabad expansion is part of Burger Singh's broader strategy to strengthen its presence in high-potential markets and build a robust national footprint in India's growing QSR sector.

From Swachh To Swasth: 13 Years Of A Campaign, And People Who Make It Matter

Who would have thought that a call from the Prime Minister of India in 2014, an appeal for a cleaner India, would make way for a movement that would grow into one of the nation's longest-running public health campaigns? What started as Banega Swachh India pivoted to Banega Swasth India. And somewhere along that journey, we began to understand that cleanliness was only the beginning. A clean India meant a healthy India, and a healthy India meant a stronger, more productive and more prosperous country. Over the years, I've watched this campaign grow from a call for better hygiene into a much larger conversation about public health, sanitation, nutrition, the environment and the people who make change happen on the ground. The journey has been extraordinary. From the President of India and Union ministers to Padma Shri awardees, Oscar winners, Nobel Laureates, doctors, health workers, ASHA workers and sanitation workers, the campaign has brought together voices from across the country and beyond the borders.Who would have thought that a call from the Prime Minister of India in 2014, an appeal for a cleaner India, would make way for a movement that would grow into one of the nation's longest-running public health campaigns? Over the years, I've watched this campaign grow from a call for better hygiene into a much larger conversation about public health, sanitation, nutrition, the environment and the people who make change happen on the ground. The journey has been extraordinary. From the President of India and Union ministers to Padma Shri awardees, Oscar winners, Nobel Laureates, doctors, health workers, ASHA workers and sanitation workers, the campaign has brought together voices from across the country and beyond the borders. Over the years, the campaign has also received several awards and recognitions, a testament to the impact it has made and the work of everyone who has been part of this journey. The partnership between NDTV and Reckitt has been central to this journey, with a shared belief that it needed to be more than just another awareness campaign. It had to translate into action and create lasting change. And, of course, many incredible faces joined us on this journey. From Amitabh Bachchan, who lent his voice to the campaign for nine years, to Ayushmann Khurrana who is the campaign ambassador and several other Bollywood actors, sportspersons and social media influencers, the campaign has had the support of people who have helped take the message to millions. This year, on Gandhi Jayanti, in Mumbai, we celebrated the beginning of Season 13. But more than a launch, it felt like a moment to look back at how far we've come and, more importantly, at the people who have brought us here. The best part of yesterday's launch was seeing the real heroes get their moment. Seventeen teachers from across India were honoured at the Dettol Banega Swasth India Teachers Awards.

Why is Gen Z So 'Unserious'? Practicing Joy in Resistance

Student protests across India have gained momentum. The youth are demanding accountability, a word not very popular in political parties. The recent movement began with the Jantar Mantar protest demanding the resignation of the education minister following the death by suicide of 17 students due to the NEET paper leak. Youngsters are now agitating against the Chief Election Commissioner (CEO) of India over the mass deletion of names from the voter list during the revision of the country's electoral rolls known as the Special Intensive Revision, or SIR. Meanwhile, women are leading more demonstrations across the country, triggered by a horrific gangrape near Lady Shri Ram college, a women's college in Delhi. While the various protests hint at political awakening, it is the ways in which dissent is expressed that has caught the public's attention. The prominence of the Cockroach Janta Party (CJP), a satirical online account which grew into a national movement, shows us the political discernment of young people today. Distinct ways of registering dissent emerged during the protests – taunting and rhyming slogans, mocking placards, singing and dancing at protest sites, banter with the police, dressing up as super heros, etc. "Sharam nahi hai mardon mein, aurat kyun hai pardon mein" (it's the men who have no shame, why do women have to hide behind a veil), chanted women protesting against gender based violence and discrimination. The slogans went viral on social media as 'vibe', attracted support and prompted netizens to make their own versions. In Bihar, students asking the police to use water cannons for fun caught the attention of the internet. Protestors even asked the police to lathi-charge them, reportedly joking that they had 'FOMO' (fear of missing out). A video of the crowd singing the national anthem to stop the police in Delhi went viral. Protest goers started making GRWM (get ready with me) for the protest reels. Memes became the highlight of the feed and the internet started asking for season two after the resignation of the education minister. The support and sarcasm transcended borders, with many from Pakistan, Nepal and Bangladesh supporting the youth protests online. A viral reel template mentions "padosi mulk ka protest ek taraf aur hum bhi ussi taraf" (the neighbouring country's protest is on one side and we too are on the same side). Many reels carried titles such as, "they are not afraid of anything", framing the young protesters as fearless and emotionally open, wearing their hearts on their sleeves. While many understood the radicality of joy in dissent, some dismissed Gen Z as unserious, the generation which grew online and has a shrinking sense of future. 'Joy is an act of resistance' Coined by Toi Derricotte, "Joy is an act of resistance" is a relevant concept to understand here. Audre Lorde, a feminist writer and rights activist explains it further through her work that joy gives us the energy to change, "to resist the oppressive structures and status quo that make us tired and apathetic". The perceived unseriousness in protests today is challenging the longstanding expectations that change must be burdened by heaviness, at the expense of mental wellbeing. The dissenters refused to give into the condition and turned fighting for justice into a celebration, a tradition long kept in the line of protest songs and chants. They declared that they're not scared of water cannon or lathi-charges, turning the intimidation tools of the state into a source of laughter. The humour in demanding social justice offsets the state's relentless strategy to drain the emotional and physical energy of protesters. It allows for the unapologetic expression of ones' political identity. Joy is a crucial weapon for the oppressed. However, it never ignores suffering. To the contrary, it means acknowledging pain, anger and grief, while continuing the quest for justice. Protests against sexual violence in Delhi rest on anger and demands for safety, slogans turn this individual anger into a collective voice. The subtle language of taunting and mocking allows protesters to use sharp words, the artistic freedom to criticise. Rhymes are difficult to forget, and not only keep the protests energized but also invite others to join in. The issue is not how people ought to protest. Whether one dissents through satire or anger, the relevant question is what is being demanded, not how it appears. Justice and accountability cannot be won by memes alone, but if the world is scrolling, a trending reel is as great a place as any to begin. If suffering didn't make us stop and watch, rhymes, costumes and songs might, and joy surely can. The young protestors know what they're doing, and it's high time we listened. After all, to borrow Cornel West's phrase, "justice is what love looks like in public", and joy helps sustain that love. Raman Chahal holds a degree in media, communication and development from LSE. Her master's research explored how the media participates in the Hinduisation of Dalit identity and its implications for caste consciousness. She currently works with children with special needs. New Delhi: Hundreds of people have gathered at Jantar Mantar, Delhi, on Friday (October 2) to demand the resignation of Chief Election Commissioner (CEC) Gyanesh Kumar over allegations of irregularities during the Special Intensive Revision (SIR) exercise. In response, the state has deployed around 4,000 police personnel and has clamped down on dissent by shutting down metro stations and detaining protesters. Videos and photographs of protesters being brutally detained by the police have emerged, showing security forces manhandling and dragging citizens to buses. Members of All India Students' Association (AISA), Democratic Youth Federation of India (DYFI), Students' Federation of India (SFI) and Congress's youth group National Students' Union of India (NSUI) have been taken into custody, along with opposition party leaders, activists and protesting citizens. As reported by The Wire earlier, the number of female police officers at central areas like Jantar Mantar and Connaught Place are noticeably few, even as women protesters also being handled roughly and taken into buses. Despite the police crackdown and widespread detentions, protesters have no backed down, raising slogans and demanding accountability. The SIR process has been riddled with controversies, with 13 crore names deleted from the draft voter rolls since June 2025.

Is Akhilesh trying to hit two birds with one stone with Dhanraj Nathwani in UP?

SAURABH VARSHNEY

The Samajwadi Party has sparked a new political debate across the country by nominating Dhanraj Parimal Nathwani for the Rajya Sabha from Uttar Pradesh. The SP announced Nathwani's name alongside senior leader Ramgopal Yadav. Ramgopal Yadav is a long-established political figure within the Samajwadi Party, while Dhanraj Nathwani is primarily associated with a business family. This distinction makes this decision unique. Politicians are also interpreting it as a signal for Yogi Adityanath.

It's worth noting that Dhanraj Nathwani is associated with Reliance Industries and is also the president of the Gujarat Cricket Association. His public life has been distinct from traditional socialist politics. Even more interesting is the fact that his father, Parimal Nathwani, is a Rajya Sabha member himself and is seeking re-election from Jharkhand in June 2026 as an independent candidate supported by the National Democratic Alliance. If the father is in the Rajya Sabha with the support of one faction and the son is the SP candidate, questions are bound to arise. The question is whether Akhilesh Yadav's decision is merely a political strategy, or is there also some communication between various centers of power behind it? Should this be considered a sign of a compromise with the central government?

Based on available public information, no evidence of such a secret political deal has emerged. Therefore, calling it the result of a compromise would be speculation at this point. But symbols are important in politics, and Nathwani's candidacy has become one such symbol.

The background of the Nathwani family makes this discussion significant. Parimal Nathwani has long been associated with the Reliance Group and has reached the Rajya Sabha under various political circumstances. His current entry into the Rajya Sabha came with the support of the National Democratic Alliance. Meanwhile, his son has been selected by Akhilesh Yadav for the Rajya Sabha from Uttar Pradesh. This development demonstrates that political connections do not always align with family or business ties. Such examples have existed before, but the current circumstances emphasize this importance.

From here, one can try to understand the potential political implications of this decision for Yogi Adityanath and the Bharatiya Janata Party. While it's not appropriate to interpret this as evidence of a compromise, it can certainly be seen that the Samajwadi Party is seeking to expand its reach beyond its traditional social base. Increasing engagement with industry, investment, employment, the business community, and influential groups at the national level can be part of any party's strategy. If the SP combines economic development with the politics of social justice, Nathwani's candidacy could signal that direction.

It's natural to compare Akhilesh Yadav to his father, the late Mulayam Singh Yadav. Mulayam Singh Yadav maintained his ideological identity while engaging with diverse social and political groups. He sought to build a broader political equation beyond his traditional support base. Interaction with various social groups and parties was a hallmark of his political career. The question is whether Akhilesh is returning to this same pragmatic style. In recent years, the social equation of backward, Dalit, and minority communities, i.e., the PDA, has been central to Akhilesh's political career. In such a situation, sending a Reliance-affiliated candidate to the Rajya Sabha sends a different message. Opposition parties have made this distinction an issue. BSP chief Mayawati questioned the selection of Nathwani and Ramgopal Yadav, linking it to the SP's PDA claim. The SP argues that socialism aims at employment, development, and prosperity, and that industry and investment are essential for this.

This debate could be the true political meaning of Nathwani's candidacy. Will the SP make economic development and investment a central message, along with social justice? Increasing engagement with industry doesn't necessarily mean the SP is abandoning its ideological identity. It could also be an attempt to combine social justice and economic development.

Another aspect of this decision is related to the 2027 Uttar Pradesh Assembly elections. Rajya Sabha elections also test the organizational strength of parties, the loyalty of MLAs, and potential alliances. In the ten-seat elections in Uttar Pradesh, the Samajwadi Party faces limited assured seats, while there is talk of anti-party voting for the tenth seat. In such an environment, Nathwani's selection could also have a broader political message.

The signal for Yogi must be understood in this context. If the SP begins to challenge the BJP's language on industry and investment, it could intensify competition for development in Uttar Pradesh politics. The BJP will have to focus on the opposition's social base as well as its economic expansion. If this strategy succeeds, investment, employment, industry, and development could become more prominent in the opposition's discourse in 2027. However, this is still a possibility, not a fact. It would also be premature to say that Akhilesh is on the verge of a secret agreement with the central government. Family ties, business connections, or support from different parties are not in themselves proof of an agreement. Direct documentation or credible evidence would be required for any conclusion. Such evidence is currently unavailable. Nevertheless, Nathwani's candidacy is difficult to ignore.

MONTHS AFTER SIR AND ASSEMBLY POLLS, ELECTION COMMISSION LAUNCHES SPECIAL DRIVE FOR 'LEFT OUT' VOTERS

New Delhi: Under fire and the target of youth-led protests today, October 2, in two of India's biggest cities, the Election Commission has directed a 'special drive' in 20 states and Union territories where it has already completed the controversial special intensive revision.

The Election Commission has released a letter to Chief Electoral Officers of the states and UTs to say "Commission has instructed to undertake a special drive for enrolment of left-out and first time/young electors." This letter that the ECI has tweeted is dated October 1, but Indian Express reports that the instruction was conveyed in writing on September 29 and repeated at a video conference with all state Chief Electoral Officers (CEOs) on October 1. As many as 13 crore names have been struck off the rolls in 30 states and UTs, with wide-ranging implications on the people who were left out from them in terms of access to rations and other welfare schemes, and even the ability to remain in the country. Crucial elections have been conducted on the basis of electoral rolls made after the SIRs, in which the Bharatiya Janata Party wrested Bengal for the first time despite 27 lakh appeals lying in wait.

This letter comes a week after an investigation by The Indian Express on September 23 showed that the question of who makes it onto the voters' list and who is left out was being raised inside the Commission itself, often without a majority vote.

Election Commissioners Sukhbir Singh Sandhu and Vivek Joshi had objected on record 14 times in 10 months to decisions taken in the Commission's name without their knowledge, including the change to Form 6 (the form new voters fill) and the centralised control of ECINet, the software on which the electoral rolls were prepared during the SIR and on which every electoral roll now sits. Essaying the process of the SIR, the Election Commission said:

"Voter enrolment is a continuous process and any person not yet enrolled in the electoral roll or whose name has got deleted can apply for enrolment at any point of time. The objective of the special drive is to identify and facilitate such electors."

The letter notes that Booth Level Officers (BLOs) – already overworked in various states – will now compare the current electoral roll with the pre-SIR roll and identify voters whose names were previously included but are missing from the current roll.

BLOs will conduct house-to-house visits to verify the status of these voters and facilitate their re-enrolment through Form 6, covering at least 20–25 voters a week and completing the exercise in about a month. They are also now to assist left-out, first-time and young voters with enrolment. These lists will now be shared with recognised political parties and Electoral Registration Officers (EROs).

Booth-level camps will also be organised, including special camps for homeless and marginalised people, the Election Commission now claims. Crucially, would-be voters will be able to use a Form 6 without the question linking it to the SIR which was added to it in July 2026 – a question which the two Election Commissioners had been formally against, and which needed a parliament approval in the first place.

This letter also says: "CEOs, DEOs and EROs will undertake appropriate awareness and mobilisation activities through educational institutions, local-level outreach, SVEEP activities, regular press briefings and other suitable platforms to ensure that every eligible citizen is made aware of the opportunity to get enrolled."

And:

"The progress and regular review of the drive may be closely monitored at the level of CEO, DEO and ERO."

The removal of local authorities in favour of the centralised control of the ECI in Delhi had been one of the points flagged by the two Election Commissioners.

RBI Remains Cautious On Crypto, Backs Underlying Technology

India has maintained a cautious approach towards cryptocurrencies while promoting the underlying technologies such as distributed ledger technology and tokenisation, RBI Governor Sanjay Malhotra said on Saturday. Malhotra said India supports innovation in technologies underlying crypto assets, including distributed ledger and tokenisation, but remains cautious about cryptocurrencies due to concerns over monetary sovereignty, monetary policy and capital flows. "So, our approach has been to promote the underlying technologies, and we are using some of these in the central bank and outside in PPP (public-private partnership) mode. But insofar as crypto is concerned, it has been a cautious approach," he said at the Kautilya Economic Conclave. Expressing concerns about cryptocurrencies, the RBI Governor said it is related to the 'singleness of money' and their potential implications for monetary policy, particularly in emerging market economies, where capital flow restrictions are in place. "The problem that you are trying to address is primarily not so much of domestic payments, because domestic payments within our country and in many countries now are quite fast, cheap and convenient," he said. The more significant challenge is cross-border payments, for which other solutions, including central bank digital currencies (CBDCs), can be explored, he said. On rising public debt and hardening bond yields globally, Malhotra said the yield movement is essentially a function of demand and supply, with government and private-sector spending rising, including on account of artificial intelligence (AI). "Money is scarce, spending has increased, both by the government as well as private enterprises, led by AI, and so that's what is leading to the hardening of the bond yields and debts," he said. Malhotra said the RBI's monetary policy primarily focuses on domestic growth-inflation dynamics. But global interest rates also have implications for India, including through their impact on real interest rates in the country. Concern over cryptocurrencies The concern over cryptocurrencies is related to the 'singleness of money' and their potential implications for monetary policy, particularly in emerging market economies, where capital flow restrictions are in place, he said. "The problem that you are trying to address is primarily not so much of domestic payments, because domestic payments within our country and in many countries now are quite fast, cheap and convenient," he said. He said the significant challenge lies in cross-border payments, where alternative solutions such as central bank digital currencies (CBDCs) could be explored. The remarks come as central banks worldwide continue to explore digital currencies and tokenisation while evaluating the monetary and financial stability risks associated with privately issued crypto assets, as per ANI. In India, the RBI has been developing and testing the digital rupee, its central bank digital currency (CBDC), while taking a cautious approach to regulating private cryptocurrencies. Elevated global bond yields Globally, a cycle of monetary tightening by central banks has contributed to higher bond yields, and on the rising public debt and higher bond yields globally, Malhotra said the yield movement is essentially a function of demand and supply, with government and private-sector spending rising, including on account of artificial intelligence (AI). "Money is scarce, spending has increased, both by the government as well as private enterprises, led by AI, and so that's what is leading to the hardening of the bond yields and debts," he said. Malhotra said the RBI's monetary policy primarily focuses on domestic growth-inflation dynamics. But global interest rates also have implications for India, including through their impact on real interest rates in the country. "That is something that we need to take care of," he said.

Mankind Pharma To Give Rs 1 Crore To Flydubai Captain Smit Machchhar, Family For Averting Flight Disaster

Acknowledging the courage and composure displayed by Capt. Smit Machchhar during the crisis, Mankind Pharma announced that it would contribute Rs 1 crore to the pilot and his family as a gesture of appreciation for the responsibility and leadership he demonstrated in the face of danger. The company, in their LinkedIn post, said the contribution was meant to recognise Capt. Smit's conduct during the crisis, particularly his efforts to protect the passengers and members of his crew. Capt. Smit's response helped ensure the safe diversion of a Flydubai flight from Dubai to Tel Aviv after his co-pilot allegedly attacked him with a knife and attempted to force the aircraft downward. Despite sustaining serious injuries, the Indian-born pilot responded to the attack and opened the cockpit door, allowing cabin crew and passengers to intervene and restrain the alleged attacker. The aircraft was subsequently diverted to Tabuk in Saudi Arabia, where it landed safely. Rajeev Juneja, Vice Chairman and Managing Director of Mankind Pharma, conveyed the company's appreciation in a letter addressed to Capt. Smit. "Some moments leave an impression on an entire nation," Juneja said in the letter, adding that the captain's "extraordinary courage, composure and sense of responsibility" had touched people in India and abroad. Juneja said Mankind Pharma believed that expressions of appreciation should be accompanied by concrete action. The Rs 1 crore contribution, he said, was the company's "humble way" of giving substance to its gratitude. Juneja also said the contribution could not equal the value of the lives protected during the crisis or the inspiration generated by the captain's actions. "A leader is not tested when everything is going well," Juneja wrote, saying leadership is tested during moments of extreme pressure when decisions can affect the lives of others.

NESTLE DEFENDS LOW FAT DAIRY WHITENER AFTER FSSAI CALLS IT 'UNSAFE' AND 'SUBSTANDARD'

Nestlé India has said its "Low Fat Dairy Whitener" is safe to consume and complies with applicable regulatory requirements after a sample of the product was classified as "unsafe" and "substandard" by the FSSAI in a food safety laboratory report. Nestlé India told NDTV Profit the product is safe to consume and complies with all applicable regulatory requirements. The company spokesperson said phosphorus is naturally present in milk and milk-based products and argued that the laboratory findings cited by the regulator reflect total phosphorus without distinguishing between naturally occurring phosphorus and phosphorus added as a food additive. According to Nestlé, the product complies with the prescribed limits for added phosphorus under the Food Safety and Standards Regulations, including on an "as consumed" basis. The response comes after FSSAI said a sample of Nestlé's Low Fat Dairy Whitener, collected from the premises of Bharat Hotels Ltd., which operates The Lalit in Connaught Place, New Delhi, was found to be non-compliant during laboratory testing. FSSAI said the sample had been declared "unsafe and substandard" and that the laboratory analysis report had been provided to the food business operator for necessary action. The regulator also directed the operator to prohibit the sale of the identified product and said an opportunity to appeal against the Food Analyst's report was available under the applicable provisions of the Food Safety and Standards Act, 2006. ALSO READ | FM Sitharaman Seeks Greater Certainty In Global Trade, Flags Risks Of Market Fragmentation Nestlé said it has shared data relating to other similar milk-based products with the authorities as part of its response to the issue. The company said it remains in continuous engagement with the authorities as part of the process established under law. FSSAI's public communication did not specify the particular laboratory parameter or finding that resulted in the "unsafe" and "substandard" classifications.

'ANGER IN THE STREETS':

TENS OF THOUSANDS PROTEST IN SPAIN OVER HOUSING CRISIS

Thousands of protesters have taken to the streets across Spain calling for greater protections for tenants after the government failed to get emergency housing legislation through parliament on Friday. About 50 planned marches are taking place on Saturday in cities including Madrid, Valencia and Barcelona. "There is a lot of anger in the streets," said a spokesperson for the Valencia Tenants' Union, where a demonstration has already started. Clashes have taken place between some protesters and police in the city. The measures put forward by Pedro Sánchez's leftist coalition government on Friday followed public outcry over the eviction of an 87-year-old woman from her home last month after she was unable to afford a sharp rent increase. Her eviction triggered nationwide protests across Spain with protesters demanding lower rents, an end to evictions, and a ban on investment funds - or "vulture funds" as the government has termed them - buying property. Sanchez's defeat in Congress on Friday heightens speculation that he might call an early general election, which was not due until next summer. His coalition government, made up of his ruling Socialist party and junior partner the Sumar alliance, does not command a majority in parliament. Spanish PM Sánchez loses key housing crisis vote after eviction of woman, 87 Photographs showed protesters in the east coast city of Valencia clashing with police officers on Saturday near arts centre Palau de les Arts Reina Sofía, which was hosting a real estate summit. Several protesters removed barriers and threw objects at officers, who responded with rubber bullets, Spanish media reported. Public broadcaster RTVE said nine police officers were injured and five people were arrested. One of the biggest demonstration is happening in the capital, Madrid. Estimates of the number of participants varied widely, with the city's Tenants' Union putting it at 500,000, while government officials put the figure at 70,000. Demonstrators have been camping in one of the city's main squares, Puerta del Sol, for days. One protester, David, told RTVE ahead of the protest: "We're not here for pleasure or comfort. We're here out of conviction." Another protester, 26-year-old librarian Marcos Sainz, told AFP news agency that he used to share a two-bedroom flat with friends, paying 900 euros (£766) a month in rent. Today, he said a one-bedroom flat often costs 1,000 euros. Sainz said he would protest against rent rises "until someone dares to regulate it all", or "we'll all have to leave Madrid". On Friday night, Madrid's Tenants' Union said that although the government's proposed measures were insufficient, the rejection of the proposed legislation "exacerbates the housing crisis which is costing the working class their lives". It is calling for a general strike over the housing crisis. The legislation put forward in Congress on Friday was divided into two separate decrees. The first decree included the suspension of evictions of vulnerable tenants until 2030, a two-year extension to rental leases due to expire before 2028, tax increases for tourist apartments, and a restriction on the purchase of residential properties by so-called "vulture funds". The second decree included the automatic renewal of rental contracts, a major demand of many on the left and the Tenants' Union. MPs rejected the first decree by 178 votes to 172 and voted against the second by 184 to 166. Prior to the vote, the conservative People's Party (PP) and far-right Vox had already said they would vote against both initiatives, leaving the minority government depending on the support of smaller nationalist parties in Catalonia and the Basque Country. However, by the eve of the parliamentary session, the centre-right, pro-independence Together for Catalonia (JxCat) had signalled its opposition to both laws, condemning them to failure.

Republicans watch with alarm as Trump's approval rating sinks in their own internal polling

Four weeks to Election Day, a growing number of House Republicans privately fear their chances of holding onto the majority are vanishing and have begun focusing on how to limit the size of a potential Democratic wave. Inside the House GOP, Republicans have watched with alarm as President Donald Trump's approval ratings have sunk in their own internal polling — including on traditionally red turf — over the last two weeks, according to more than a dozen people familiar with the discussions. Now, the House GOP is entering triage mode. Republicans are discussing pulling money from once-competitive races they see as too difficult to win, including Rep. Mariannette Miller-Meeks in Iowa, Rep. Tom Kean in New Jersey and an open seat in Nebraska, according to three people familiar with the talks. But the GOP does have a huge cash advantage, and not all Republicans are pessimistic. Speaker Mike Johnson is "absolutely still convinced" that he can hang onto the House and is not taking any seats "off his board," according to a political aide. Johnson just returned from New Jersey and is planning a rally with Miller-Meeks in Iowa next week, according to his team. The House GOP's campaign arm, too, strenuously denies that the majority is lost. "Thirty days out, House Republicans are on offense, and we're outspending Democrats in the final stretch in every race," National Republican Congressional Committee spokesperson Will Kiley said in a statement, adding, "House Republicans are going to defy history, and we're going to win." The rising anxiety among Republicans, though, reflects a grim national environment that has triggered alarm bells up and down the ballot, with Senate Republicans suddenly forced on defense in red seats like Kansas — with control of both chambers of Congress up for grabs. Trump, too, is on a nationwide campaign swing, with stops in a more competitive part of Ohio, as well as deep-red territory like Texas, Oklahoma and Alabama. "There's a lot of close races, and it's hard to make a prediction," retiring GOP Rep. Dan Newhouse said this week of his party's chances, but acknowledged, "Affordability is a big deal. People see the gas prices every single day." While Newhouse said his party has worked to address cost of living issues, he noted, "There's just a lot of things making it tough right now for rural America — which I can speak to specifically — but for Americans all over the country." Many Republicans acknowledge to CNN that the souring national environment — fueled by soaring diesel prices, stubborn inflation and hardening opposition to the Iran war — are largely out of their control this late in the race. They say their strategy is now focused on how to limit Democrats to the slimmest majority possible — in a bid to make governing all but impossible for a potential House Speaker Hakeem Jeffries next year. Tennessee prison chief to resign after Christa Pike's failed execution, governor says

The head of prisons in the US state of Tennessee is resigning after the failed execution of death row inmate Christa Pike on Wednesday. Governor Bill Lee announced the change on Saturday, sharing the news in a joint statement with Tennessee Department of Correction Commissioner Frank Strada. Strada said that his stepping down is "in the best interests" of the state, and called the ongoing investigation into the incident "entirely appropriate and necessary". Pike, who was sentenced to death in 1996 for the murder of Colleen Slemmer, survived two lethal injections and is now in critical condition at a Tennessee hospital as her lawyers seek to commute her sentence. "Commissioner Strada has served with integrity, and I appreciate his willingness to put the interests of Tennesseans first during this difficult moment," Lee said. Lee has ordered an independent review into Pike's attempted execution and he halted all executions in the state for the year. Pike is being treated at a hospital in Nashville, Tennessee where doctor are attempting to clear the drugs used during the execution from her body, according to legal filings. She was injected with two lethal doses of pentobarbital on Wednesday but remained alive. She was then sent to hospital in an ambulance. While receiving the two doses, "she could be heard crying, whimpering, and breathing loudly throughout the procedure", her lawyers said. As of Thursday night, she was unconscious, intubated and on a ventilator.

JUSTICE DEPARTMENT ASKS COURT TO LET TRUMP REINSTATE WHITE HOUSE PRESS BAN

The Justice Department argued that President Donald Trump should be allowed to reinstate his White House ban of CNN, MS NOW and Politico in a court filing late Friday ahead of a hearing next week in the lawsuit from the news companies. "[T]he President determined that Plaintiff news networks had published stories that adversely affect national security, including publishing possibly classified or sensitive information," the Justice Department argued. "In doing so, these outlets each demonstrated their willingness to publish information that undermines national security. Restricting access to the White House removes one avenue for these outlets to obtain such harmful information." In a court filing Monday night, the news organizations argued that the stories Trump was objecting to were just the type of reporting the Constitution's framers intended to protect. They called the ban an "unlawful assault on the most fundamental First Amendment freedoms." Judge Timothy Kelly is currently considering whether to extend a two-week order restoring the outlets' access to the White House – an order that expires at the end of next week. Kelly will hold a hearing Thursday on the news outlets' request for a preliminary injunction, which, if granted, would last for a longer period of time while the case plays out. The White House has claimed that the media companies published news stories that put national security at risk – an argument that Kelly initially rejected last week. Friday's filing did not offer any new evidence that the outlets had threatened national security in the stories they had published. The Justice Department said that it was not required to show that the outlets "actually published classified information" to justify the ban, and it leaned into the idea that spreading "misinformation" is itself a national security risk. The Justice Department also stressed that the president had determined that the outlets had failed to meet standards of "professionalism" expected for journalists who are given the "privilege" to cover the president from the White House grounds. The relevant court precedent, the Justice Department argued, did not "prevent the President from concluding that bona fide journalists would identify sources instead of relying on anonymous sources, commit to factual accuracy, and provide the White House an opportunity to comment." The news organizations are challenging Trump's press ban on First Amendment grounds. They also argue that the administration violated their due process rights with how the White House implemented it. Trump announced the White House ban for the three outlets last month via a social media post, and in comments after, indicated he was doing so because of his general frustration with their coverage. However, the White House has since claimed that the news organizations had posed a national security threat with stories they published about the Iran war, the East Wing ballroom construction and the GOP midterm convention.

MEDICAL PLANE WITH 6 ON BOARD MISSING OFF MASSACHUSETTS COAST

US authorities are searching for six people after a medical plane bound for Boston, Massachusetts went missing early Saturday morning. The Federal Aviation Administration told the BBC that it lost contact with the Gulfstream G-100 plane and put out a search and rescue notice just after 1:00 local time (6:00 GMT). An air and water search is underway off the coast of Nantucket, a Massachusetts island, according to the US Coast Guard's Northeast District. The plane departed from Bermuda's L.F. Wade International Airport at 23:40 local time, according to flight data from FlightAware, and was slated to land at Boston's Logan International at 1:30 EDT (6:30 GMT). According to the tail number released by the Coast Guard, the plane belonged to Latitude Air Ambulances, a company that provides international medical flights for patients returning home. FlightAware's tracker shows the aircraft significantly dropped in altitude before its communications went dark, plummeting from around 7,300m (24,000ft) to 3,300m (11,000ft).

Ukraine says it forced 250 Russian soldiers to surrender in daring operation

RUSSIA HITS SECOND MAJOR BRIDGE IN UKRAINE'S CAPITAL KYIV

A Russian strike has hit a second major bridge in Kyiv, Mayor Vitaliy Klitschko has said, as Moscow ramps up attacks on critical infrastructure in Ukraine's capital. The attack on Saturday morning injured two people, and damaged the road surface and overhead trolleybus wires on the Pivnichnyi (Northern) Bridge, Klitschko said, causing traffic jams. It comes after the Pivdennyi (Southern) Bridge was hit multiple times by Russian drones this week, with Klitschko warning that "the enemy is tearing Kyiv apart". Russia said its drones had hit the two bridges used to transfer Ukrainian troops and military cargo. Moscow again urged foreign citizens, including diplomats, to leave Kyiv. The two Kyiv bridges across the Dnipro River link the western and eastern parts of the capital and had not been hit before Thursday. The Russian strikes have severed road, rail and trolleybus links across the wide river. The ongoing drone threat means restrictions on other routes, bringing traffic jams to the city's roads for a second day - though Friday's gridlock has not been repeated to the same level. Many of the city's residents - which number about three million - rely on the metro to travel across the city every day. The fear is this new Russian tactic will result in sustained attacks which could effectively cut the city in two. Writing on Telegram on Saturday morning, Klitschko said "emergency services are on their way" after the Pivnichnyi Bridge was hit. "Traffic on the bridge from the left to the right bank is currently blocked," he added. Earlier attacks on the Pivdennyi Bridge prompted Kyiv's defence council to hold a crisis meeting on Friday. Klitschko warned afterwards that the city was now in a "very dramatic situation" as Moscow was battering its "critical infrastructure, logistics, housing" and other key facilities. Experts say Russian drones are unlikely to bring down the bridges - but repeated attacks will force their closure and risk weakening their structure, making them unusable. More powerful weapons could collapse the bridges, some of which are reported to be in poor condition after years carrying heavier traffic than they were designed for.

Carse charged over nightclub incident

London, Oct 2 : England fast bowler Brydon Carse has been charged by the Cricket Regulator for bringing the game into disrepute following a late-night incident in Derby in August. Carse, 31, was arrested and subsequently de-arrested on suspicion of being drunk and disorderly in the early hours of August 23 while out with his county side Durham teammates. Later, a video circulating on social media showed him in handcuffs.

"The matter will now be referred to the independent Cricket Discipline Panel for adjudication. As the process is ongoing, no further comment will be made," further said the Cricket Regulator in its statement on Friday.

As per Regulation 3.2, it says, "No Participant may conduct themself in a manner, do any act or make any omission at any time which is improper or which may be prejudicial to the interests of cricket or which may bring the ECB, the game of cricket or any cricketer or group of cricketers into disrepute."

Kirti Sharma recounts tense final after India's historic recurve women's team gold

Nagoya, Oct 3 : India's women's recurve archery team produced a historic upset at the Asian Games 2026, defeating South Korea 5-3 in the final to end the Korean powerhouse's 44-year dominance in the event.

Kirti Sharma, who teamed up with Ankita Bhakat and Kumkum Mohod in the gold-medal winning trio on Friday, said the Indian archers relied on their process and mental composure to negotiate a high-pressure final. "We were not thinking about our opponents. We were just focused on our own performance and following the process we went through during training," Kirti Sharma told SAI media in Japan.

The Indian team had earlier produced another statement victory in the semifinals, defeating China 5-1 to set up a final against South Korea.

Kirti said controlling their emotions and maintaining faith in each other proved crucial as India attempted to break South Korea's long-standing hold over the Asian Games event.

"All three of us had to control our emotions and believed in each other. We didn't think about the results and just gave our 100 percent," she added.

The Hazaribagh-based archer, who hails from Haryana and trains under coach Udham Singh at the SAI training centre in Hazaribagh, said the Indian trio were aware that even a small lapse could change the complexion of the contest."We knew that our opponents can take the game away if we commit even a small mistake. But we stood strong and maintained the same intensity from the first arrow that we fired to the last one," Kirti said.

India's victory came after the country's compound archers had already made a major impact at the Games, winning the men's, women's and mixed team gold medals at the Okazaki Chuo Sogo Park.Kirti said that unprecedented success had provided additional motivation to the recurve squad before their own competition began. "Our confidence took a big boost after the compound events. The day we won three consecutive gold medals was a lucky day for India. It motivated us a lot. We wanted to emulate their feat," she said.

Presented by Donepudi Chakrapani and produced by Venu Donepudi under the Chitralayam Studios banner, the film is directed by Guni Manchikanti. The movie is set for a grand theatrical release on October 9. Tinnu Anand, Upendra Limaye, George Maryan, Akshay Lagusani, Vishnu oi, Karthikeya, Vismaya Sri, Malvi Malhotra, Kashyap, Shubhalekha Sudhakar, Raja Ravindra and others play key roles.

The trailer launch event of the film was held grandly recently. On this occasion... Actor Upendra Limaye said: "First of all, I would like to sincerely thank my close friend Sandeep Reddy Vanga. He was the one who introduced me to the Telugu film industry with my own voice. What he told me at the time literally came true. Later, I got the opportunity to act in Hit Machine Anil Ravipudi's 'Sankranthiki Vasthunam'. Wherever I go, I can never forget the love and affection showered on me by Telugu audiences.

When Vaishakh and Guni narrated the story of 'Baa Baa Black Sheep' to me, I found it very different and interesting. I always give more importance to the story than my character. I accept a film only when the content is good. This is my first full-fledged role in Telugu, which is why this film is very close to my heart.

It is a great pleasure to be part of a project made under a prestigious banner like Chitralayam Studios. Working with young Telugu actors like Vishnu, Samriddhi, Malavika and Akshay was a wonderful experience. Though this is Guni's debut as a director, the way he wrote the story and brought it to the screen is remarkable.

Generally, food, clothing and shelter are considered basic necessities of life. But in South India, especially for Telugu people, cinema is also a basic necessity. I hope all you passionate movie lovers will watch 'Baa Baa Black Sheep' in theatres and thoroughly enjoy it."

Actor Vishnu Oy said: "I would like to thank everyone who supported the trailer launch of our 'Baa Baa Black Sheep'. I thoroughly enjoyed the story when I first heard it. The film features several talented actors, including the Nepalese actress who plays my pair.

It was a great experience working with National Award winner Upendra Limaye garu. Coming from a theatre background, his performance is like a masterclass. My longtime friend Akshay Lagusani has also done an excellent job in this film. I strongly believe he will reach greater heights in the coming days. While shooting in Meghalaya, the people and the local atmosphere extended tremendous support to us. Cinematographer Ajay has done excellent work in terms of visuals. This first collaboration between my good friend and director Guni and producer Venu garu is arriving in theatres on October 9. I sincerely wish the film great success and thank everyone from the bottom of my heart."

RANABAALI – NEVER FORGET THE TRUTH DOCUMENTARY SERIES: THIRD EPISODE 'THE MEN WE FORGOT' RELEASED

The much-awaited pan-India film Ranabaali, starring Vijay Deverakonda and Rashmika Mandanna in the lead roles, is directed by Rahul Sankrityan. Presented by T-Series and produced by Naveen Yerneni and Y. Ravi Shankar under the Mythri Movie Makers banner, Ranabaali is being mounted on a grand scale. The film is gearing up for a worldwide theatrical release on October 16, coinciding with the festive occasion of Vijayadashami.

As part of the four-episode documentary series titled Ranabaali – Never Forget The Truth, the third episode, 'The Men We Forgot', is now streaming on YouTube.

In this episode, director Rahul Sankrityan reveals that the character of Ranabaali was inspired by several legendary historical warriors from Rayalaseema who fought for their motherland.

Director Rahul Sankrityan said, "Rayalaseema is a land that has given birth to many brave warriors. The heroic stories of Seema Palegars such as Budda Vengal Reddy, Uyyalawada Narasimha Reddy and Gadekal Bobbili Nagireddy continue to be narrated through traditional ballads even today. When you visit the villages of Rayalaseema, people still speak with great pride about their courage and contributions.

"When I first heard about Gadekal Bobbili Nagireddy, the idea for this story began taking shape. He was known for riding horses and was even believed to communicate with the gods. He was eventually killed as a result of conspiracies. While researching the period of the great famine, I came across the story of Budda Vengal Reddy. During the famine, he sold all his assets and established gruel centres, saving the lives of thousands of people. Uyyalawada Narasimha Reddy fought against the British and became a formidable force for them. "I am also from the soil of Rayalaseema. During my childhood, I witnessed many people who displayed extraordinary courage and determination to do good for society. These warriors were physically strong and known for their bravery and fearlessness. I drew inspiration from all of them while designing the character of Ranabaali."

The makers will announce the streaming date of the fourth and final episode, 'The Last Load', soon.
