CJP alleges delay in release of Das, Ranka; 4 sureties rejected

Das and Ranka were sent to five days of judicial custody on October 14 after they entered Jantar Mantar, which had been denotified as a designated protest site

New Delhi: The bail hearing of Cockroach Janta Party (CJP) leaders Saurav Das and Ashutosh Ranka was "delayed" on Sunday, October 18, as the Special Executive Magistrate (SEM) did not arrive at the scheduled time, activist Ratna Singh said, alleging that four sureties had been rejected on "vague" grounds. Das and Ranka were sent to five days of judicial custody on October 14 after they entered Jantar Mantar, which had been denotified as a designated protest site, by scaling its locked gates. The CJP leaders maintained that they had unfurled the national flag and raised slogans. In a post on X, Singh said she had been at the police station since 11 am, while the hearing was scheduled for noon. She said the Assistant Commissioner of Police (ACP/SEM) had not arrived at the Mandir Marg police station by 4.42 pm.

"This is really concerning. They have rejected 4 sureties till now on vague reasons. They have made people who have FIRs against them for being part of protest as people having criminal antecedents (sic)," Singh alleged. In another post, Singh said, "Unfurling the Indian National Flag is not a crime, and the boys should not remain in custody due to procedural delays." Questioning the functioning of the SEM courts in the national capital, Singh said higher courts had asked authorities to follow the hierarchy and alleged an "absolute misuse of power". On Saturday, the CJP said in a post on X that it had consulted senior advocate Kapil Sibal and warned of legal action if Das and Ranka were not released by Sunday.

"If Ashu and Saurav are not released by tomorrow, we will pursue legal action against all those who deliberately ensured that they continue to be in illegal custody, especially when they have not committed nor charged with any offence," the outfit had said.

According to the police, while Tiger did not suffer any injury in the attack, the driver of the 'Baaghi' actor was injured in the incident. Details about the severity of the injury have not been revealed till now.

Bollywood actor Tiger Shroff had a narrow escaped on Sunday after three motorcycle-borne men opened fire at his car in the Juhu area of Mumbai. According to the police, while Tiger did not suffer any injury in the attack, the driver of the 'Baaghi' actor was injured in the incident. Details about the severity of the injury have not been revealed till now.

Within hours of the incident, the Lawrence Bishnoi gang shared a post on social media, taking responsibility for the attack. The Mumbai Police have informed that they have formed 15 special teams to investigate the firing incident. Maharashtra Chief Minister Devendra Fadnavis also called the Mumbai Police Commissioner to inquire about the incident.

The CM has directed the Police Commissioner to immediately investigate the matter and take strict action against those responsible. National Secretary, All India Congress Committee, Sachin M. Sawant expressed his concern through a tweet that read, "The news of a shooting at actor Tiger Shroff's car is utterly shocking.

What's exactly going on in Mumbai? The murder of Baba Siddique, a shooting at Salman Khan's house, threats to numerous actors and producers... Law and order in Mumbai has gone completely haywire. It's not just a lack of law and order; it's as if utter chaos has taken hold. The Chief Minister has proven to be a total failure!" MP and President of the Mumbai Regional Congress Committee, Prof. Varsha Eknath Gaikwad also shared that "Mumbai's law and order in shambles!" She further asked the authorities to take necessary action to ensure the safety of Mumbaikars.

"First, a shootout outside Salman Khan's house, then the murder of Baba Siddiqui, and now news of a shooting targeting actor Tiger Shroff! In Mumbai, the country's financial capital, if such incidents keep happening one after another, then whose responsibility is it exactly to ensure the safety of Mumbaikars? Reports indicate that another person was injured in the shooting on Tiger Shroff. The reason behind the shooting is still unclear, and the police are searching for the culprits. Do criminals still fear the law?," she shared. -

NEW DELHI ■ (TSIT)

Consumers can use the Pharma Sahi Daam app and NPPA website to check revised prices of drugs. Jagan demands deployment of Central forces for local body polls in Andhra

VIJAYAWADA ■ (TSIT)

Jagan alleged that the entire system, from the SEC to the police under the direction of CM Naidu were obstructing the process of nominations as he was " scared of defeat"

Former Andhra Pradesh Chief Minister and YSR Congress Party president Y.S. Jagan Mohan Reddy on Sunday demanded deployment of Central forces in the state to ensure free and fair local body elections. Accusing the ruling coalition of unleashing a reign of terror to stop YSRCP candidates from filing nominations, he urged the State Election Commission (SEC) to intervene and provide security to candidates coming to nomination centres to file their papers.

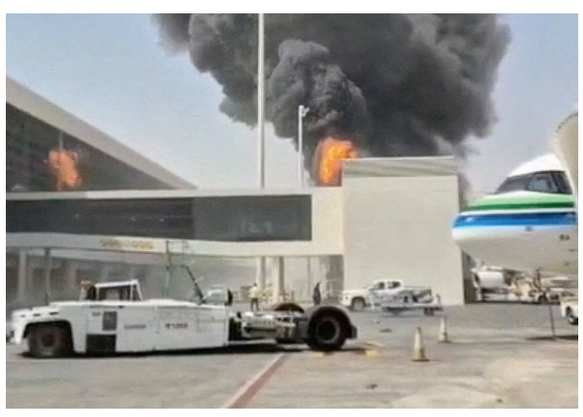

He alleged that the entire system, from the SEC to the police under the direction of Chief Minister N. Chandrababu Naidu were obstructing the process of nominations as he was "scared of defeat". Jagan Mohan Reddy, who earlier called on State Election Commissioner Anil Chandra Punetha, told him that if candidates are not allowed to file their nominations, the reputation of the Commission and its officials would be at stake.

"If the SEC becomes a party to such undemocratic practices by allowing nominations to be obstructed, it would be an unprecedented incident in history.

We urged the SEC not to be part of such practices," he said. He requested the SEC to ensure that every candidate who wishes to file a nomination is allowed to do so through an online system or at a centralised location at the SEC office in Amaravati.

Four workers killed as chimney collapses at Bengal factory

Kolkata, Oct 18: At least four workers died and another was seriously injured after a chimney under construction collapsed at a private sponge iron factory in Jamuria in West Bengal's West Burdwan district, police said on Sunday.

An investigation has been launched to determine the cause of the collapse and whether prescribed safety norms were followed during the construction work.

The incident triggered anger among a section of residents and workers on the factory premises. According to local sources, protesters also clashed with police personnel, who were trying to bring the situation under control. According to local sources, a chimney was being constructed at Unit 3 of the Shyamsel factory in Jamuria on Saturday night when the structure suddenly collapsed while some workers were engaged in the work. The workers were buried under the rubble, prompting other factory employees to rush to the spot and initiate rescue efforts. Police, fire brigade personnel and rescue teams from the state disaster management force subsequently reached the site and joined the operation.

After a prolonged rescue operation, five workers were pulled out from beneath the debris and rushed to hospital. Doctors declared four of them dead, while the fifth worker, who sustained serious injuries, was admitted to a private hospital in Durgapur for treatment.Two of the deceased have been identified as Sukanta Pal and Balaram Mandal, both residents of Jamuria, according to local sources. Their colleagues said the third deceased worker was a native of Assam. The identity of the fourth victim is yet to be established.

Following the incident, family members of the deceased and injured workers, along with a large number of local residents, gathered outside the factory. The accident has raised questions about the safety arrangements at the factory. Demands have been made for an investigation into whether adequate safety measures were in place to protect workers and whether the chimney was being constructed in accordance with prescribed technical standards. The exact cause of the collapse, however, remains unclear.

Jamuria MLA Bijan Mukherjee and Asansol-Durgapur Police Commissioner Pranab Kumar reached the spot on Saturday night after receiving information about the accident. Mukherjee said an investigation was underway to ascertain the cause of the collapse. He added that authorities would also examine whether any negligence in the safety arrangements had contributed to the accident during the construction work. The MLA said discussions would be held with the factory management regarding financial compensation for the families of the deceased workers and proper medical treatment for the injured worker.

The attackers reportedly returned later on motorcycles and pelted the bus with stones and bricks, shattering its window-panes and injuring an elderly passenger.

According to reports, the group returned a third time and allegedly threatened that Jammu and Kashmir-registered vehicles would not be allowed to operate in Haryana.

Heavy rains lash Chennai, northeast monsoon gets active in TN

CHENNAI: Heavy rains lashed Chennai and its neighbouring districts, marking the first spell of the northeast monsoon, the Regional Meteorological Centre (RMC) said here on Sunday. Several parts of the city witnessed heavy rains on Saturday night, leaving many localities inundated and causing traffic disruptions.

North Chennai bore the initial brunt, recording between 6 cm and 10 cm of rainfall in less than an hour. Uthiramerur in Kancheepuram district received the maximum rainfall of 15 cm during the last 24 hours, ending at 5.30 pm on Saturday, followed by a 12 cm downpour at Manalurpet in Kallakurichi during the same period.

The RMC and the India Meteorological Department (IMD) confirmed that the northeast monsoon has entered an active phase. The heavy showers were driven by an upper-air cyclonic circulation over north Tamil Nadu and coastal Andhra Pradesh, alongside a trough extending from Lakshadweep to the southwest Bay of Bengal. The IMD has issued a yellow alert for 17 districts, including Chennai, Tiruvallur, Chengalpattu, Kancheepuram, Cuddalore, and Tiruchi, until October 23.

From Gurdaspur – Pulwama to Pahalgam: Broken trust, shattered national security

Over the past decade, India has faced a series of devastating terrorist attacks that have not only claimed innocent lives but also exposed vulnerabilities in the nation's security apparatus. From the heart-wrenching Pulwama attack in 2019 to the recent massacre in Pahalgam, these incidents have underscored the persistent threat of terrorism and the challenges in safeguarding national security. On 14 February 2019, a suicide bomber rammed an explosive-laden vehicle into a convoy of the Central Reserve Police Force (CRPF) in Pulwama, Jammu and Kashmir, killing 40 personnel. The attack, claimed by Jaish-e-Mohammed, marked one of the deadliest in the region and led to heightened tensions between India and Pakistan, culminating in the Balakot airstrikes. The incident exposed significant intelligence lapses and raised questions about the preparedness of security forces. Questions are still raised when many of the perpetrators of the Pulwama attack are still at large, even the police officer Davinder Singh arrested for ferrying terrorist were given bail as the FIR was not strong enough. How could this happen, and who was helping him? These questions highlight the inability of the NIA and other investigating agencies.

Pulwama was not the only terrorist attack that happened after the BJP-led government came to power at the Center. Remember the words of Amit Shah in 2014, "When Modi is the prime minister, Pak intruders won't dare to cross the border." Unfortunately, those words remain as an unfulfilled promise. The government was more interested in milking those incidents to win elections rather than taking concrete measures to counter terrorist activities, in Modi's words, "Apta me Avsar."

Gurdaspur attack, 2015: On 27 July, three gunmen dressed in army uniforms attacked a bus and a police station in Gurdaspur, Punjab, killing 10 people, including civilians and police officers. The assailants were eventually neutralised after a prolonged gunfight.

Pathankot airbase attack, 2016: On 2 January, militants breached the high-security Pathankot Air Force Station, leading to a three-day standoff that resulted in the deaths of seven security personnel and four attackers. The attack was attributed to Jaish-e-Mohammed.

Uri attack, 2016: On 18 September, four terrorists attacked an Indian Army brigade headquarters in Uri, Jammu and Kashmir, killing 19 soldiers. The attack led to India's surgical strikes across the Line of Control. Pahalgam attack, 2025: On 22 April, militants targeted tourists at Baisaran Valley near Pahalgam, killing 26 people, including 25 Indian nationals and one from Nepal, and injuring over 20 others. The Resistance Front, linked to Lashkar-e-Taiba, claimed responsibility, citing opposition to alleged demographic changes in Kashmir.

Abrogation of Article 370 and terrorism

The abrogation of Article 370 in 2019, which granted special status to Jammu and Kashmir, aimed to integrate the region more closely with the rest of India. However, it also led to increased unrest and a surge in local terrorism. Groups like The Resistance Front have emerged, leveraging local grievances and employing hybrid tactics that blend conventional and guerrilla warfare. The recent Pahalgam attack, targeting tourists, indicates a shift in strategy to disrupt the region's economy and communal harmony.

The Indian government's response to terrorism has often been marked by strong rhetoric and decisive actions, such as surgical strikes and air raids. However, I feel, while these actions serve as immediate deterrents, they do not address the underlying issues fueling militancy. The politicisation of national security, especially during elections, has also been a point of contention, with calls for a more nuanced and sustained approach to counterterrorism. The Pahalgam attack stands out not just for its brutality but also for its symbolic implications. Pahalgam, known for its scenic beauty and as a hub for tourism, represents the potential for peace and economic revival in Kashmir. By targeting tourists, militants aimed to instill fear, disrupt the local economy, and challenge narratives of normalcy returning to the region. The attack has led to a significant drop in tourist arrivals, impacting livelihoods and reinforcing the militants' objectives.

- Enhance intelligence capabilities: Invest in advanced surveillance technologies and improve inter-agency coordination.
- Community engagement: Foster trust with local populations through development initiatives and by addressing grievances.
- Counter-radicalisation programmes: Implement educational and vocational programs aimed at preventing youth from being lured into militancy.
- Diplomatic efforts: Engage with international partners to isolate and sanction entities supporting terrorism.

The journey from Pulwama to Pahalgam underscores the evolving nature of terrorism in India and the persistent challenges in ensuring national security. While military and intelligence responses are crucial, a holistic approach that includes political will, community involvement, and international cooperation is essential. The government also must take the Opposition and major political parties into confidence on the action initiated against the terrorist groups and their supporters, Only through sustained and inclusive efforts can India hope to restore trust, ensure peace, and safeguard its citizens from the scourge of terrorism.

Centre urges research push in medical colleges, AI-led science

New Delhi: Union Minister of State for Science and Technology Dr Jitendra Singh on Monday chaired a high-level review of the Department of Science and Technology (DST) and urged the newly formed Anusandhan National Research Foundation (ANRF) to facilitate the creation of medical research parks in medical colleges to boost clinical innovation and biotech entrepreneurship. In a detailed review of ANRF's future plans, the minister encouraged the foundation to explore bold ideas to accelerate India's science-driven growth. "Medical research parks can help transform our clinical innovation landscape and promote local biotech startups," he stated.He also backed ANRF's plan to launch a nationwide digital platform a

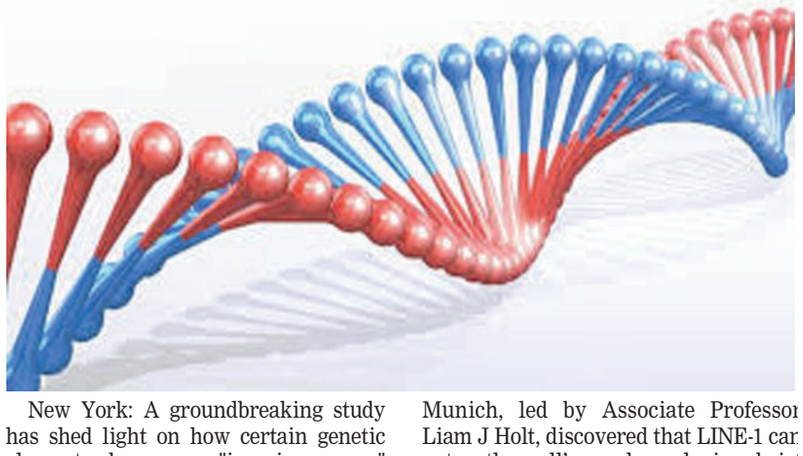

'cloud of research and innovation infrastructure' aimed at offering deep-tech startups and academic researchers access to underutilised scientific equipment and laboratory facilities across India. This move is expected to democratise research, particularly for smaller institutions and innovators. Dr Singh called for focused investment in 'AI-for-Science,' a programme designed to use artificial intelligence to accelerate discoveries in core scientific fields such as physics, chemistry, and biology through advanced machine learning tools.

Pushing for a stronger linkage between research and real-world application, the Minister reiterated the need to fast-track the transition from deep academic research to deep-tech products, emphasizing commercialization of patents and publications. "India must move from isolated innovation to a more integrated and impact-driven ecosystem that brings together research, startups, and industry," he said, urging ANRF to form partnerships with leading corporates and support venture-builder models.

He asked the ANRF to prioritise research areas of national importance including climate forecasting, aerospace, biochemistry, materials science, and drug discovery. Highlighting the strategic importance of artificial intelligence, Dr Singh also stressed on developing an indigenous 'India AI Open Stack' a foundational AI model embedded with scientific and engineering capabilities tailored for Indian research needs. Such initiatives, he noted, would not only enhance national capacity but also help position India as a global leader in AI-powered science and innovation.

Study unveils how 'Jumping Genes' successfully invade human cells

New York: A groundbreaking study has shed light on how certain genetic elements, known as "jumping genes," can invade the nucleus of human cells to replicate. These elements, scientifically termed transposable elements, are simpler than viruses and have the ability to use the host's genetic machinery to make copies of themselves.

Published in Science Advances, the study highlights the behavior of one such element—long interspersed nuclear element 1 (LINE-1)—which is the only transposable element still capable of self-replication in the human genome. These elements, while largely silenced by the body's defense mechanisms, continue to move within our DNA, much like viruses that leave behind traces of their presence. Researchers at NYU Langone Health and the Munich Gene Center at Ludwig-Maximilians-Universität (LMU) Munich, led by Associate Professor Liam J Holt, discovered that LINE-1 can enter the cell's nucleus during brief moments when the nucleus breaks open as cells divide. This allows LINE-1 to bind to cellular DNA and copy itself.The team found that during cell division LINE-1 RNA clusters with a protein it encodes, ORF1p, to latch onto DNA until the nucleus reforms. These findings provide crucial insight into the mechanisms behind LINE-1 replication, which could pave the way for developing therapies to prevent its replication in the future.

Dr. Holt expressed hopes that the research could lead to a better understanding of other cellular processes. "Moving forward, we will be looking to see if other condensates undergo functional changes as the ratios between their components change," he said.

WHEN CHILDREN TURN AWAY:

WHY KERALA'S SENIOR CITIZENS BILL MATTERS

By Binish Thomas

There is something deeply unsettling about a society that teaches children to respect their parents, celebrates the sacrifices of grandparents and speaks endlessly about family values, yet leaves some of its oldest citizens struggling for safety, care and dignity. For decades, the Indian family has been regarded as the first line of protection for the elderly. Parents sacrifice their time and resources to educate their children, build homes and secure their families' futures, hoping for companionship and support in old age. But what happens when that promise breaks down and older people face neglect, abuse, financial exploitation or abandonment by the very people they once protected?

Kerala has now placed this question at the centre of a proposed law. The Keralam Senior Citizens' (Care and Protection of Rights) Bill, 2026, introduced in the state Assembly by Chief Minister V. D. Satheesan on October 13, seeks to establish a comprehensive framework for protecting older people. It proposes to regulate elderly-care institutions, strengthen safeguards against abuse, improve access to healthcare and digital services, and recognise the right of senior citizens to live with dignity and independence. The bill has been referred to a select committee for further consideration and is not yet law. Nevertheless, its introduction raises a question that extends beyond Kerala: is India prepared for a future in which elderly care can no longer depend entirely on family goodwill?

Kerala's ageing population makes this issue particularly urgent. Longer life expectancy, lower birth rates and the migration of younger generations have changed household structures across the state. Many older people now spend long periods alone while their children live elsewhere for work or education. Distance does not necessarily mean abandonment, as thousands of families continue to care for elderly parents from afar. However, distance can make it harder to identify neglect, arrange medical assistance or intervene when problems arise.

Some older people are widowed, have no close relatives, live with disabilities or require continuous care. For them, the absence of a reliable support system can turn an ordinary health problem into a crisis.

A modern elderly-care system must support both family-based care and professional services while recognising older people as individuals with rights, preferences and the capacity to make decisions about their own lives. One of the central ideas behind Kerala's proposed legislation is that senior citizens should be able to remain in their own homes for as long as possible with appropriate support, while institutional care should be available when necessary.

ABUSE BEHIND CLOSED DOORS

Elder abuse is not always visible. It may involve physical violence, humiliation, emotional intimidation, financial exploitation, denial of food or medication, and neglect of basic needs. Financial abuse deserves particular attention because an older person's property, savings or pension can become a source of conflict within a family. Those who depend on relatives for everyday assistance may find it difficult to report mistreatment or challenge decisions made on their behalf.

The proposed bill seeks to establish clearer accountability for such conduct. It provides for penalties of up to three years' imprisonment and a fine of ?50,000 for specified offences involving abuse or abandonment. It also proposes safeguards against the unauthorised possession of residents' property and the operation of care centres without registration. Under specified circumstances, registered medical practitioners and senior citizen care centres would be required to report suspected abuse or exploitation within 48 hours. Such a provision could help ensure that warning signs, including unexplained injuries or indications of neglect, are not ignored.

WHO IS WATCHING THOSE ENTRUSTED WITH ELDERLY CARE?

As demand for professional elderly care grows, ensuring that caregivers are competent and trustworthy becomes increasingly important. Families often employ caregivers to assist older relatives with bathing, mobility, medication, feeding and other daily activities, but they may have limited means of verifying their qualifications, backgrounds or training.

Kerala's proposed bill seeks to address this gap through the registration and regulation of care centres and a certification framework for caregivers. It envisages prescribed training, police verification and a searchable register of certified caregivers. These safeguards are particularly important for people who are bedridden, living with dementia or unable to communicate mistreatment easily. However, regulation must extend beyond paperwork. Care homes need adequate staffing, hygiene standards, medical support, complaint procedures and regular inspections. Caregivers also require proper training, fair remuneration and safe working conditions.

An elderly-care system cannot function effectively if its workers are undertrained, underpaid or left without support. Protecting senior citizens and safeguarding those who care for them should be complementary objectives. The real test will be whether the proposed framework leads to meaningful oversight rather than becoming another system of registrations and certificates.

THE NEXT THREAT MAY ARRIVE THROUGH A SMARTPHONE

The vulnerabilities of older people are not confined to homes and care centres. They increasingly extend into the digital world, where fraudsters exploit fear, trust and unfamiliarity with technology through fake calls, fraudulent investment schemes, impersonation, phishing messages and other forms of cybercrime. The growing use of artificial intelligence also creates new opportunities for impersonation and deception.An older person who loses life savings to a digital scam may suffer more than financial hardship. Such a loss can undermine independence, increase dependence on relatives and leave victims feeling ashamed or reluctant to report the crime. The proposed bill recognises the need for better protection against cyber fraud. It also envisages more accessible digital services, including government portals that are easier to use, while retaining non-digital alternatives for people who cannot comfortably navigate online systems.This is important because digital inclusion should not become digital exclusion. Banking, healthcare and public services may increasingly move online, but senior citizens should not be forced to depend on others simply to access their own entitlements.

DIGNITY MEANS HAVING A CHOICE

One of the most difficult aspects of ageing is the loss of control that can accompany physical frailty or illness. Decisions about housing, medical treatment, finances and everyday routines may gradually shift from the individual to relatives or caregivers. While such a transition may sometimes be necessary, it should not erase the older person's preferences.

The proposed bill includes provisions relating to living wills, which allow people to record their wishes concerning medical treatment in specified future circumstances. It also envisages improved access to geriatric healthcare, specialised care for conditions such as dementia and Parkinson's disease, and more age-friendly public spaces and services.

These proposals point towards a broader understanding of elderly welfare. It is not enough to keep an older person alive or provide a place to sleep. Care must also preserve autonomy, comfort and human dignity wherever possible.

A LAW IS ONLY AS STRONG AS ITS IMPLEMENTATION

Kerala's proposed bill is an important step towards recognising elderly care as a public responsibility rather than merely a private family matter. However, legislation alone cannot resolve every problem associated with ageing. Protection units must have trained personnel and adequate resources. Complaints must not disappear into bureaucratic procedures, care facilities must face genuine scrutiny, and older people living alone or in remote areas must be able to access services without excessive difficulty. Families also need practical support before a caregiving crisis develops into neglect.

Economic security is another major concern. Many senior citizens depend on modest pensions, savings or financial support from relatives. Healthcare costs, inflation and long-term care expenses can rapidly erode their financial independence. Rights on paper cannot substitute for affordable services and reliable social-security support. The state must therefore look beyond punishment and invest in prevention, counselling, community-based care, financial assistance and accessible healthcare.

THE MEASURE OF A SOCIETY

A parent's contribution to a family does not lose its value when that parent grows old, falls ill or can no longer earn an income. Yet older people are too often treated as burdens precisely when they need patience, companionship and care the most. Kerala's proposed legislation cannot, by itself, restore broken relationships or guarantee that every child will fulfil every family obligation.

THE PATH TO CHANGE OF POWER IS NOT THROUGH MOBOCRACY, BUT THROUGH PUBLIC OPINION AND DEMOCRACY

SAURABH VARSHNEY

India is not only the world's largest democracy, but also a country known for diversity, tolerance, peace, and democratic values. Here, the people have the right to change power, and this right is the greatest strength of Indian democracy. However, when examples like those in Bangladesh are cited regarding power change in the country, or when calls for "regime change" are made, this issue requires serious consideration. In a vast and mature democracy like India, the path to power change should be through constitutional mechanisms, public opinion, and peaceful movements, not through mob pressure or anarchy.

In recent times, the opposition in India has been accused of attempting a regime change along the lines of Bangladesh. The debate about 'regime change' has also surfaced in the context of senior advocate Prashant Bhushan. Such statements and accusations must be evaluated beyond political accusations and counter-accusations. It is important to understand the true meaning of a person's statement in its full context. It would not be appropriate to draw final conclusions about the intentions of an individual or the entire opposition based solely on a single word. Nevertheless, if regime change means removing the government or destabilizing the system by bypassing the constitutional process, such thinking is certainly worrying for a healthy democracy. There are differences in the political, social, and constitutional circumstances of India and Bangladesh. In India, regular elections, an independent judiciary, an Election Commission, Parliament, state legislatures, and constitutional institutions are established means of power transfer. The strength of these institutions ensures the stability of democracy. It is neither necessary nor consistent with the fundamental spirit of Indian democracy to imagine political developments in another country being replicated in India.

India is characterized by a tradition of peace, tolerance, and dialogue. Here, power is not the permanent property of any individual, party, or organization. Governments come and go, but the country and its constitutional system remain supreme. Therefore, creating conditions that increase social tension, violence, or institutional instability for the sake of achieving any political objective is not in the national interest.

There is a clear distinction between democracy and mobocracy. In a democracy, the public's voice is heard, dissent is respected, and decisions are made in accordance with law and constitutional procedures. In contrast, mobocracy can lead to a tendency to impose decisions through sheer numbers and pressure. If crowds are gathered on the streets to overthrow a government, to pressure constitutional institutions, or to disrupt law and order, it can undermine democratic traditions. However, this does not mean that the public should not have the right to protest or oppose the government. Peaceful protests, sit-ins, demonstrations, public meetings, and public awareness are vital components of democracy. When the public is dissatisfied with a policy, decision, or form of governance, they have every right to raise their voice. It is essential that protests remain peaceful, democratic, and within constitutional framework.

The most significant feature of Indian democracy is that the final decision rests with the people. If the public is dissatisfied with a government, they have the right to change it by casting their votes in elections. This is the most effective and legitimate means of democracy. The popularity of a government should be judged not by slogans, social media campaigns, or crowd size, but by broad public opinion and the electoral process.

If a government's policies are anti-people, do not meet public expectations, or serious shortcomings in governance are evident, the opposition has a responsibility to raise these issues before the public. It should present alternative policies, demand accountability from the government, and seek public support through democratic means. If the public agrees with the opposition's views, they can entrust it with power in elections. This is neither unusual nor destabilizing; it is the natural process of democracy.

Similarly, if the public re-elects the current government, all political parties have a responsibility to respect that mandate. In a democracy, simply accepting the outcome of one's own choice and rejecting a disfavored mandate cannot be justified.

Whenever protests arise in the country regarding a serious public issue, their objective should be to convey the voice of the people to the government and bring about reforms in the system. Peaceful public movements on issues such as unemployment, inflation, corruption, farmers' problems, education, health, and civil rights can hold governments accountable. Such movements do not weaken democracy, but rather strengthen it, provided they are conducted without violence and anarchy.

The opposition's job is not only to oppose the ruling party, but also to present a responsible alternative. Similarly, the ruling party should address the public's problems rather than cower in the face of criticism. In a democracy, it is wrong to consider dissent as anti-national, but dissent cannot be used to support violence or damage to the constitutional system.

India's democratic strength lies in its people, its Constitution, and its institutions.

KOLKATA DURGA PUJA STAMPEDE:

Suvendu Adhikari's First Major Challenge As Chief Minister

Jayanta Ghosal

Five months after Suvendu Adhikari became Chief Minister of West Bengal, he is facing his first major challenge in the state. The tragedy at the Chorbagan Durga Puja pandal in North Kolkata has raised serious questions about crowd management, public safety, and the administration's preparedness for one of Bengal's biggest annual festivals.

The incident was a major fiasco. Almost immediately, questions arose about what preventive measures had been taken to control the crowds. Crowd management is crucial during Durga Puja, when thousands of people visit pandals across Kolkata and other parts of West Bengal. The scale of this tragedy has made it particularly distressing. According to reports, at least 19 people died, and 25 others were injured in the stampede at Chorbagan on the evening of October 17, the first of the two Saptami days in the 2026 Durga Puja calendar. The immediate question being asked is: who is responsible? This is especially significant during the present Durga Puja celebrations because the new government had taken a particular interest in the festival and had initiated changes in the way several puja committees were managed. Some committees previously associated with Trinamool Congress leaders and ministers were sidelined or reorganised, while new teams associated with the BJP came to the forefront.

BJP'S PUJA PUSH

Coincidentally, Union Home Minister Amit Shah was in Kolkata at the same time. His schedule had included a visit to Palermath, as well as visits to and inaugurations of several Durga Puja pandals, including Shobhabazar Rajbari. The broader political objective was to connect with the Bengali cultural identity and the social traditions associated with Durga Puja. However, another incident had occurred the previous day involving a book stall organised by the CPI(M). There was a bulldozer operation, and footage circulated showing people trying to handle or retrieve books. The precise circumstances surrounding that incident require clarification, but it had already become a matter of political controversy. Following the Chorbagan stampede, Suvendu Adhikari spoke to Amit Shah, who cancelled his scheduled programmes and expressed his grief over the incident. Prime Minister Narendra Modi also announced compensation, as did the state government. Adhikari also went to the hospital, met the families of the victims, and blamed the tragedy on the callousness of the organisers.

He appealed to Durga Puja organisers across Kolkata to take all necessary precautions to ensure public safety. He described the incident as painful and extremely heartbreaking. He said that he had spoken to a sitting judge and would arrange for an inquiry into the incident. This was one of the first steps announced in response to the tragedy.

The second major issue concerns the police investigation. Why should the police make definitive statements before examining the available footage? The CCTV recordings must be studied carefully. They should establish who was present, including whether the Police Commissioner was at the site, who was responsible for particular arrangements, and what happened at each stage of the incident. The footage will be important in reconstructing the sequence of events and determining responsibility.

WHAT WENT WRONG AT CHORBAGAN?

The central issue is the management of the enormous crowds that gather at popular Durga Puja pandals. Chorbagan is situated in an area of Kolkata known for its narrow lanes. Managing large numbers of visitors in such a location requires careful planning, adequate police deployment, clear entry and exit routes, trained volunteers, and readily available emergency services.

World Bank Group mobilises USD 36 bn in India in four years

New Delhi: The World Bank Group has helped mobilise USD 36 billion in private capital for development in India over the past four years, including USD 9.6 billion for Micro, Small and Medium Enterprises (MSMEs), as it steps up efforts to spur private sector-led growth and job creation. Private capital mobilisation by the Group rose nearly five-fold to USD 14.5 billion in fiscal 2026 from about USD 3 billion in fiscal 2022, Manuel Reyes-Retana, IFC's division director for South Asia, said.

The increase reflects growing investor interest in development-linked investments, with guarantees from the International Finance Corporation (IFC) and the Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency (MIGA) helping reduce investment risks and attract private funding, he said. Institutional investors are increasingly drawn to such instruments because they are familiar with the World Bank Group's underwriting standards and governance practices, Reyes-Retana said.

"We are seeing a positive response from private sector investors and growing momentum in this area. Investors across the world, including in India, are increasingly looking to diversify their investment instruments and assets," he told PTI. Private capital mobilisation involves attracting investment from private investors to finance development projects and supplement public funding. It enables development projects to tap private investment alongside public funding, with guarantees and other risk-sharing mechanisms helping make investments more attractive to investors.

The World Bank Group has also supported initiatives to improve access to finance for India's MSMEs, which play a key role in employment and economic activity but often face constraints in obtaining affordable credit.

Under the USD 436 million Raising and Accelerating MSME Performance (RAMP) programme, the World Bank supported reforms to the Trade Receivables Discounting System (TReDS), a digital platform that allows businesses to raise funds against unpaid invoices rather than wait for buyers to pay. The initiative has helped more than 250,000 MSMEs gain faster access to capital, while 30 non-banking financial companies have joined the platform, expanding the pool of lenders, the World Bank Group said. Credit guarantees for women-owned businesses rose to 18 per cent from 14 per cent over two years, mobilising more than USD 1 billion, it said. India's first Green MSME Guarantee Fund has benefited more than 4,000 MSMEs and supported USD 40 million in investments in green and circular-economy activities.

The efforts form part of the World Bank Group's broader partnership with India to promote job-rich, private sector-led growth and support the country's ambition to become an upper-middle-income economy over the next decade. Under its Country Partnership Framework for fiscal 2026-31, the Group is focusing on inclusive and sustainable growth in support of India's Viksit Bharat vision for 2047.

FRANCE ROCKED BY VIOLENT PROTESTS, 1,800 ARRESTED

France awoke to scenes of widespread damage on Sunday after a day of riots and demonstrations, with shopfronts shattered, burnt out cars, charred bikes, and piles of glass and debris on the pavements of Paris. Police arrested about 1,800 people on Saturday as some 550,000 demonstrators took to the streets for protests that were largely peaceful. They were demonstrating against rising fuel prices, the cost of living and deteriorating public services, including schools. Groups of rioters, some dressed in black and wearing masks and balaclavas, also came out in Paris, Marseille and other towns and cities, with some setting fire to cars and buildings. Widespread looting took place across the cities of Paris, Marseille and Lille, as well as other areas. In Paris, protesters clashed with riot police, who turned tear gas and water cannon on the crowds. During the day, some groups lit fires in the street and torched vehicles. At least one restaurant was gutted by fire, and the BBC saw fighting breaking out among some of the groups. Riot police were seen charging at one crowd in central Paris and hitting several people with batons. "It's like we had a war," Paris resident Mehmet Ozeden told news agency AFP. Another resident, Anita GrasIt, said it was "terrifying" to see groups of young people "smashing everything, with total impunity". The looters were "proudly carrying supermarket baskets filled with goods and laughing about their thefts", Maryse, a woman living nearby who gave only her first name, told the BBC. Further south in Marseille, protesters broke into the city hall by using a metal fence as a battering ram. In Lille, a McDonalds was set on fire, police said, and an Apple store in the city was broken into and looted. More than 500 police officers, gendarmes and firefighters were injured in the unrest on Saturday, France's interior ministry said. Around 1,500 shops and retailers were also damaged in the disturbances, the Retail and Trade Federation said. On Sunday morning in Paris, residents surveyed the aftermath, which included the smashed glass frontages of designer stores including Ralph Lauren, Gucci and Versace. Shopkeepers were out early with brooms, picking up large shards of glass as they began the clean-up. Rubbish trucks worked their way down some of the larger streets to clear some of the debris. Many shops were daubed with graffiti, some reading "tax the rich" and "eat the rich." The BBC visited a clothes shop close to the Place de la République which had been ransacked, with piles of clothes and furniture scattered across the shop floor. The shop's distraught owner told the BBC he saw looters on the CCTV who were in the shop for just over an hour and a half, and that during that time he saw no police in the process. The owner - who asked not to be identified - told the BBC he did not believe any of those who robbed the shop were genuine protesters against school conditions or the cost of living. He said the looters were taking advantage of the demonstrations. Close to the Place de la République, a BBC reporter visited the Good Vibes bakery, whose glass front was completely shattered, and the Nicolas wine store, where every bottle was either stolen or smashed, leaving smell of alcohol lingering in the street. CCTV footage shown on France's Channel 2 shows groups of teenagers, mostly wearing masks, in a shop selling mobile phones helping themselves to items from the shelves. Student protests in France have seen hundreds of thousands take to the streets since they began late last month. Protesters have been demanding additional investment in their schools, criticising the lack of teachers and staff, overcrowded classrooms and run-down buildings. France's Interior Minister Laurent Nuñez said that while demonstrating was a fundamental right, there were "outrages" committed by "several thousand far-left individuals" who were determined to target public buildings and confront the police. Later, they were joined by "delinquents who looted and ransacked numerous businesses in several cities in France", he said. In the city of Lyon, Mayor Grégory Doucet said the burning of the city's tourist office was "a tragedy", telling French outlet BFMTV that "it breaks our hearts because it's a very iconic, well-known historic building". Local police said "hostile individuals" prevented firefighters from safely tackling the blaze. Fire crews also battled a fire at Limoges town hall, which caused part of the building to collapse. Local officials said the town hall was "largely lost." "A wild horde" had "deliberately" set fire to the 143-year-old building, said Maurice Barate, the prefect for the Haute-Vienne department. Elsewhere, a young man "had his hand blown off" by a small explosive in Saint-Étienne, the south-eastern city's Mayor Régis Juanico said on social media. "Such a tragedy should never have happened," he said. France's interior ministry said Saturday's protests involved "targeted acts of violence" from "hooded individuals" in places, including parts of the capital and also in Marseille, Rennes, Toulouse, and the western city of Angers.

SEVERAL DEAD OR INJURED IN MAJOR FIRE AT CANADA MILITARY BASE

Several people have been killed or injured as a result of a large fire near a Canadian military base in Alberta, the nation's military has said. The Canadian Armed Forces (CAF) said the full extent of the incident was being assessed and that details of casualties and injuries would not be made public until that was complete. Canadian TV network Global News reported that at least seven were killed and dozens more injured when a gas line or gas well was hit during a live-fire training exercise, citing unnamed military sources. Canadian Forces Base Wainwright, where the fire broke out at about 16:00 local time (22:00 GMT) on Saturday, is one of the country's busiest military training bases. On Sunday morning, a defence department spokeswoman told the BBC that investigations were ongoing but "at this time, there are no indications that it was the result of any terrorist activity." Defence Minister David McGuinty earlier said the CAF and local authorities were managing the fire, describing the situation as "very, very active and delicate". Canada's Prime Minister Mark Carney said his "thoughts are with all the brave women and men affected". The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation (CBC) said Royal Alexandra Hospital in Edmonton had declared a code orange, a disaster response protocol for responding to a high-casualty incident. Warren Thirsk, an emergency department doctor there, told the broadcaster that the number of patients would otherwise "overwhelm" Edmonton's healthcare facilities. "It is more patients than any of us want to count right now. It's a disaster. It's a one in every 15 to 25-year disaster." After the fire erupted on Saturday, it "spread rapidly due to high winds" and tore through the fences of the base, the Municipal District of Wainwright said. The region experienced gusts of up to 100km/h (62mph), though local officials indicated fire crews had contained the blaze. McGuinty told reporters he "cannot recall an incident like this in recent memory". Local authorities have urged residents to avoid the area and give all emergency vehicles right of way. The mayor of the nearby town of Wainwright, Bruce Pugh, said it was a "heavy day" for his community. "We have neighbours who are either serving or former members of the Canadian Armed Forces. We're integrated, our kids play in the same hockey teams, attend the same schools," he told CBC. While details on the impact of the fire remain unclear, Pugh said he believed this would come to be the area's largest-ever mass casualty event. Gen Jennie Carignan, chief of Canada's defence staff, said it was a "profoundly difficult moment" for the CAF. Neighbouring provinces have mobilised in support. Saskatchewan Premier Scott Moe said he had deployed resources to Alberta and was "ready to provide more if required", while British Columbia Premier David Eby said his government had offered "all possible assistance". Wainwright is the main base used by the Canadian military for live-fire training exercises, according to CBC, with about 690 military personnel and 300 civilian workers on-site on a typical day.

A WAVE OF HOMEMADE, SYNTHETIC DRUGS SWEEPS US AND DEEPENS CRISIS

The few grains of fentanyl sit in the silver foil as a straw, held between Mike's lips, hovers above, with a cigarette lighter below. The 48-year-old army veteran is crouched low in an alleyway in Columbus, Ohio's Linden neighbourhood. "This drug will damn near make you do anything, unfortunately," he says. The hit he's smoking cost three or four dollars. "You can snort too much and you can't take it back. Kind of like a gunshot. Can't call the bullet back," he says. He burns the foil and inhales. As the opioid takes hold, he grips the fence behind him. He sways as a low moan comes from deep in his throat - he could be humming a tune. We've spent a few days with Mike - he's been our guide through the neighbourhood's back streets. Everyone seems to know him and he's regarded fondly. He helps out at a local pawn shop and gas station, and that's how he feeds his 20-year-old opioid addiction. Synthetic opioids are more powerful and in plentiful supply, and they have transformed the drugs landscape. Fentanyl, which is entirely man-made, is 50 to 100 times more powerful than heroin, which is cultivated from poppies. It is now often cut with synthetic tranquillisers, which make reviving overdose victims more difficult.

TRUMP WAIVES SEVERAL RUSSIA SANCTIONS AS ROW WITH ZELENSKY INTENSIFIES

Donald Trump has blocked numerous sanctions on Russia two days before they were due to take effect, as a row with his Ukrainian counterpart Volodymyr Zelensky deepens. The sanctions were passed by the US Congress and signed into law by the US president in September. But Trump issued an executive order on Friday night saying that suspending some was in the US national interest, prompting a backlash from US lawmakers. Zelensky said it was unfortunate the US has decided to "completely disregard" the sanctions. Russian envoy Kirill Dmitriev said Trump's order was "an important and truly historic moment", and that the sanctions would have inflicted "serious damage" on the US and global market. Relations between Washington and Kyiv frayed after the US struck a controversial deal to import Russian diesel last week. Ukraine has accused the Trump administration of withdrawing key military support. Since then, Ukraine's president declared it was nice to be among "real leaders" while addressing an EU summit, after Trump said Zelensky was "more difficult to deal with" than Russian President Vladimir Putin. The sanctions suspension seemed to add further fuel to the fire. Zelensky said on Saturday morning that the sanctions "could have helped enormously" and that the law was "supposed to impose truly effective pressure on Russia to bring this war to an end". He pointed to Russian overnight attacks on 15 Ukrainian energy facilities that had caused power cuts in several regions and said: "Russia is trying to cause a blackout in Ukraine – right before winter." Zelensky said it was "important that everyone in America also sees what is really happening" on the ground. The new US sanctions law took aim at Russia's economy by giving Trump broad powers to levy tariffs of up to 100% on imports from the top five purchasers of Russian oil and gas – most significantly China and India. It also included sanctions against senior Russian figures, including Putin, as well as Russian financial institutions and Moscow's so-called "shadow fleet" of vessels used to circumvent existing embargoes. US Secretary of State Marco Rubio said that the suspension would consist of a 60-day pause to allow for the Trump administration to analyse the impact they might have on the US and global economy. The suspension drew criticism from US politicians from both main parties. Democrats including the Virginia Congressman Don Beyer criticised the move, accusing Trump of capitulating to Moscow and turning his back on Kyiv and Zelensky. A handful of Republicans also came out against the move. Texas Senator Ted Cruz, a Trump ally, called waiving the sanctions a mistake, telling Fox News that there were other ways to address fuel prices, while the state's other Senatory John Cornyn called the move "reckless". North Carolina Senator Thom Tillis called it "beyond irresponsible", arguing that Trump could bring energy prices down by ending the Iran war instead of "doing a solid" for Putin.

EUROPEAN DIPLOMATS ATTACKED BY ISRAELI SETTLERS IN WEST BANK

A delegation of European diplomats has been attacked by masked Israeli settlers in the occupied West Bank. Belgium condemned the assault on its consul general and the other envoys, while France decried the attack as "appalling". Both called for Israel to bring those responsible to justice. The Israel Defense Forces (IDF) also condemned what they called "the severe act of violence" and said they were investigating. But the office of the Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu cast doubt on what happened, suggesting it was part of a "co-ordinated campaign to smear Israel". The attack came only a day after a number of Palestinians and Heidi Levine, a Washington Post photographer, were injured in a separate assault by settlers in another village in the West Bank. US Secretary of State Marco Rubio said the attack on Levine was "disturbing" and "not a good look". It was also condemned by the US ambassador to Israel, Mike Huckabee, who called it a "despicable act of terror carried out by masked cowards". A staunch ally of Israel, Huckabee said the assailants must face "prosecution to the fullest extent of the law".

Oil facilities hit in deadly overnight attack on St Petersburg

ANTI-GOVERNMENT PROTESTERS BATTLE WITH POLICE IN ALBANIA

Demonstrators and riot police fought pitched battles in the centre of Tirana on Saturday for the fifth day in a row. Masked protesters, many of them high school and university students, hurled rocks and petrol bombs at riot police trying to defend the education ministry, one of the focal points of the protests. The police responded with water cannon and volleys of tear gas, sending the crowds scattering. There are also reports that rubber bullets were used for the first time. Protests which began in the summer have grown into a wider anti-government movement, with calls for the prime minister to resign following corruption allegations linked to his administration. Many of the protesters in central Tirana wore gas masks or face masks, while volunteers handed out syringes of saline eyewash to reduce the pain from the tear gas which billows down the street. The constant boom of petrol bombs could be heard exploding on Saturday. During the afternoon, the focus of the protests shifted to the office of Prime Minister Edi Rama on the city's main boulevard. Here the crowds swelled to far larger numbers than on previous days. Riot police faced a steady hail of cobble stones and fireworks, and responded with barrage after barrage of tear gas, some of the canisters landing far back in the crowds, causing panic. Incensed by the gas, the crowds waited for it to clear, then renewed their attacks. Black smoke from a burning vehicle and the sirens of police cars and ambulances split the afternoon. As dusk fell, police special forces arrived to reinforce the riot police. Many people have been injured on both sides, 80 people have been charged with disorder so far, and hundreds more have been arrested, or are under investigation. The centre of the Tirana looks increasingly like a war zone, scattered with broken glass and burnt debris. George, a 19-year-old medical student who works as an electrician to fund his studies, stood near the burnt-out education ministry building, a scarf wrapped round his face and goggles covering his eyes. He is one of the thousands who have taken part in the increasingly intense protests which began in early June.

Jaqueline Amorim Accepts UFC Suspension After Contaminated Supplement Findings

Jacqueline Amorim, the UFC's women's strawweight, has received a six-month suspension. Low-level quantities of ostarine were discovered in two out-of-competition samples. The UFC's Combat Sports Anti-Doping programme (CSAD) said the evidence emphasised that the contamination was due to a supplement rather than intentional use.

UFC STAR JASMINE JASUDAVICIUS HIT WITH $10,000 FINE OVER BIZARRE FIGHT CONTROVERSY

Canadian flyweight Jasmine Jasudavicius stated that she was fined $10,000 after her April win over Karine Silva. Officials believed she had a nicotine product in her mouth. The 37-year-old insists it was only peppermint chewing gum. However, the Manitoba Combative Sports Commission still imposed its maximum penalty for an unauthorised foreign object. Jasudavicius returns to the Octagon on Saturday as the co-main event at UFC Edmonton. She faces former title challenger Erin Blanchfield at Rogers Place. A win could push the home favourite closer to a shot at the women's flyweight title. Jasudavicius explains the controversial Winnipeg UFC incident The incident occurred during Jasmine Jasudavicius' unanimous-decision win over Brazil's Karine Silva at UFC Winnipeg on April 18. The broadcasting cameras seemed to catch an object in her mouth. This led to online speculation that she was chewing tobacco or a nicotine pouch. Jasudavicius denied using any stimulant. She told Full Send MMA that "I got frickin fined that last frickin' card; I got fined because everyone thought I had a (nicotine pouch) in my mouth. I had gum; they charged me frickin' $10,000." She said. "I told them, 'Hey, it fell out on the mat; go and get it. That's the evidence, peppermint gum." Jasudavicius was fined despite officials failing to identify the mystery object The Manitoba commission's letter reportedly described the situation as an "unauthorised foreign object" being present during competition. Officials could not confirm what the object was or whether it offered any performance advantage. This is why Jasudavicius' win was not overturned. Still, the commission treated it as a safety violation and issued the maximum fine. Jasudavicius said they deducted the amount from her bank account. This left her frustrated with what she saw as an excessive punishment.

Babar Azam Achieves Major Milestone, But Virat Kohli's World Record Remains Untouched

Veteran batter Babar Azam achieved a significant milestone as he became Pakistan's fifth cricketer to complete 16000 runs in international cricket during the ongoing ODI tri-series on Sunday. Babar became Pakistan's third fastest player to reach the milestone during the first ODI of the tri-series against Sri Lanka at the Rawalpindi Cricket Stadium, with England being the other side. He took just 399 innings to complete 16000 runs across the three formats, being third fastest for the Men in Green behind Mohammad Yousuf (388 innings) and Javed Miandad (398 innings). He is just the fifth Pakistan player to get to the mark. Apart from him, Miandad and Yousuf, Inzamam-ul-Haq and Younis Khan have also made more than 16000 runs across the three formats. The former white-ball skipper Babar got to the milestone against Sri Lanka. Coming into the match, he needed only seven runs to reach the mark, and he got there pretty quickly in his innings. Notably, India's Virat Kohli is the fastest batter to complete 16,000 international runs, having achieved the milestone in his 350th innings. After Pakistan were sent in by Sri Lanka, Babar was out to bat at No.3 when Saim Ayub was caught at mid-off in the third over of the innings, bowled by Dilshan Madushanka. Babar opened his account with a beautiful drive off Asitha Fernando before another drive through the off-side brought him three runs. It was enough for him to reach 16000 runs in international cricket, but he wasn't done, though. The recently turned 32-year-old unleashed a few more good-looking strokes as he made 45 from 57 balls before he was dismissed by Eshan Malinga.

'Kill Shreyas Iyer, Marry Abhishek Sharma, Hook Up With Shubman Gill': Anaya Bangar's Clear Take

A video of Anaya Bangar, the daughter of former India cricketer Sanjay Bangar, is going viral on social media. It is from a recent interview in which Anaya was asked to play 'Kill, marry, hookup' with Indian cricketers Shubman Gill, Abhishek Sharma and Shreyas Iyer as the options. "Kill Shreyas Iyer, marry Abhishek Sharma and hook up with Shubman Gill," responded Anaya in Krishnank Atrey's YouTube channel. Anaya played age-group men's cricket for Mumbai before undergoing a gender-affirming surgery in March this year, completing a transition process that began in 2022. Anaya, who is planning to move to Australia to resume her cricketing career after undergoing gender-affirming surgery, urged the Board of Control for Cricket in India (BCCI) earlier this month to take a leaf out of Cricket Australia's playbook by introducing a pathway to enable transgender players to compete in women's cricket. "If BCCI can follow what Australia has done, that would be a wonderful thing," Anaya told Hindustan Times. On facing online abuse after undergoing gender-affirming surgery, Anaya added: "They haven't experienced what I have." CA's landmark verdict on transgender cricketers raised eyebrows, with South Africa all-rounder Marizanne Kapp criticising the decision. "Absolutely ridiculous, this should NOT be allowed!" Kapp said while tagging the official handle of the WBBL. Without taking offence to Kapp's comments slamming CA's decision, Anaya countered the Proteas star's remarks, saying the path had been cleared only after undergoing extensive testing. "I think I understand the place where she's coming from. To counter the point about the unfair advantage aspect: there has been testing done by the Manchester University Institute of Sport.

Yuzvendra Chahal Reveals Battle With Alcohol Addiction: "Crossed All Limits After Divorce"

Indian cricketer Yuzvendra Chahal, who recently retired from first-class cricket, has revealed that he battled alcohol addiction to the point where he had to check into a rehabilitation centre. One of the most successful bowlers in IPL history, Chahal has faced several personal challenges, including alcohol addiction and divorce. "After last year of county cricket... It (alcohol addiction) crossed all limits, so I checked into a rehab centre and stayed there for 26 days. Now, I know how to handle it," Chahal told former India opener Aakash Chopra on a podcast. "That decision made a massive difference to my personal life. My maturity increased. My emotions are balanced now. Last IPL, my body felt like I was 30 years old again -- doing gym work, fielding drills and training properly," he said. He said his family and friends helped him navigate the difficult phase of his life. "My best friend and family were there," the 36-year-old leg-spinner said. Chahal said his alcohol problems began around 2011, when he entered the IPL, and worsened after his divorce. However, he added that he is now in a much happier place after overcoming his addiction. "Initially, I was young. There were parties. In 2011, I played my first IPL. (South African cricketer) AB de Villiers once told me, 'Balance is key in life.' It sounds easy, but it is not. "Things got excessive after my divorce, and my mental state was not that great. I realised that if I continued down that path, I would ruin the very thing I love most -- cricket. So I put an end to it, and now I am in a much happier and better space," Chahal said. Speaking about the turmoil in his personal life, Chahal said being a public figure often gives people a free pass to comment on his private affairs. "When you are a public figure, everything happening in your life becomes an invitation for people to comment. I felt bad, and there were a lot of difficulties," he said. "I spoke to Anirudh sir (Chaudhry, former BCCI treasurer) and requested a break, and he was very supportive.

SENT HOME, STRIPPED OF CAPTAINCY:

PAKISTAN STAR SMASHES STATEMENT CENTURY VS SRI LANKA

Former Pakistan captain Salman Ali Agha smashed a century to power Pakistan to 305/8 against Sri Lanka in their ODI tri-series opener in Rawalpindi. Agha, who was recently stripped of the T20I captaincy, slammed 107 off just 90 balls to lead Pakistan's charge in an otherwise disappointing batting display. Salman was replaced as Pakistan's T20I captain by Sahibzada Farhan earlier this month after the opening batter led the side to a silver medal at the Asian Games in Aichi-Nagoya. Before losing his place in the T20I side, Agha returned to Pakistan's domestic circuit, where he scored a triple century as well as 145 for Hyderabad Kingsmen Academy in the President's Trophy Grade-I tournament. This was his fourth ODI century since the start of 2025, making him the only Pakistan batter to hit multiple tons in that period. The 32-year-old had a miserable last three months. He was sent home ahead of the third Test in England in August after leading the team in the first match. Agha hit two consecutive boundaries off pacer Asitha Fernando to com-

Brighton's Diego Gomez Scores Stunning Halfway-Line Goal

Diego Gomez did a Beckham. Collecting the ball near the halfway line, the Brighton midfielder advanced just into Crystal Palace's half before launching a stunning strike over goalkeeper Walter Benitez and into the net in the seventh minute of Sunday's Premier League match at the Amex Stadium. The Paraguay international's audacious effort drew comparisons with David Beckham's famous long-range goal for Manchester United against Wimbledon on the opening day of the 1996-97 Premier League season. That strike remains one of the most iconic goals in English football and helped propel Beckham into the global spotlight.

Alejandro Davidovich Fokina Rallies Past Rafael Jodar To Win First Masters 1000 Crown In Shanghai

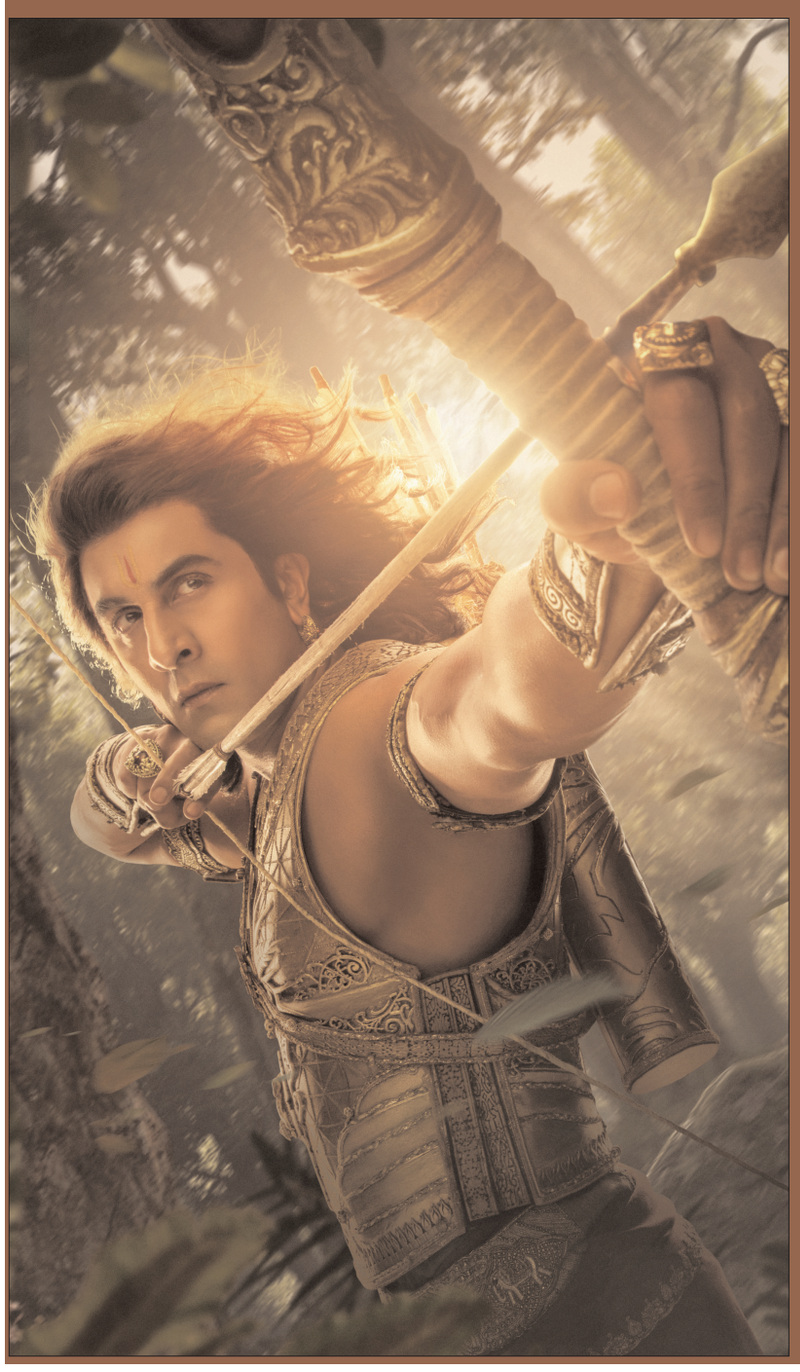

Alejandro Davidovich Fokina earned the biggest title of his career on Sunday, rallying past compatriot Rafael Jodar to win the Shanghai Masters crown. The 27-year-old Spaniard was trailing by a set and a break at 1-6, 2-3 before fighting back to secure a 1-6, 7-6 (5), 6-4 victory inside the Qizhong Forest Sports City Arena and claim his maiden ATP Masters 1000 title. En route to the final, Davidovich Fokina saved a match point against Frances Tiafoe in the third round and also recovered from a set down to defeat both Hubert Hurkacz and Alexander Zverev. With the two-hour, 28-minute victory, Davidovich Fokina claimed the third ATP Tour title of his career and by far the biggest. Having lost his first five tour-level finals, including his only previous Masters 1000 final at Monte Carlo in 2022, he has now won his last three finals following title runs in Mallorca and Chengdu earlier this year. Both players were attempting to win their maiden ATP Masters 1000 title. Jodar was appearing in his first Masters 1000 final, while Davidovich Fokina was contesting his second after finishing runner-up at the Monte Carlo Masters in 2022. After lifting the trophy, Davidovich Fokina collected the winner's prize of USD 1,151,380, while runner-up Jodar earned USD 612,340. The Spaniard will now head into the European indoor season carrying a 10-match winning streak.

"THERE'S DEFINITELY A REASON":

Dana White Breaks Silence On UFC Cutting 16-0 Farid Basharat

UFC CEO Dana White has offered a pointed but vague explanation for the promotion's decision not to re-sign undefeated Farid Basharat. The Afghan-British fighter left the UFC with a perfect 16-0 professional record and seven straight Octagon wins. Yet he was not offered a new contract after completing his previous deal. Basharat confirmed his departure on October 15, saying he had not been offered either a new contract or an opponent since his last fight. He also rejected any suggestion that he had turned down bouts. He called the situation disappointing and said the UFC was "heading in a different direction" from the organisation he grew up admiring. Dana White addresses Farid Basharat's departure Speaking after UFC Edmonton, Dana White was asked why a fighter with such a record had been allowed to leave. He avoided giving a direct answer but highlighted that the decision was about more than just results. "Yeah, I think that when guys' contracts are up, I mean, this isn't the first time this has happened," White said. . Which could be turning down fights or whatever the reasoning is." He then added, "If you're 16-0 with seven wins in the UFC and don't get re-signed, there's definitely a reason." The remark suggested there may be an unknown issue behind Basharat's exit. However, White did not specify it. Farid Basharat's undefeated UFC run ends in a shocking exit Farid Basharat secured his UFC contract through Dana White's Contender Series in 2022 and went 7-0 in the promotion in 2023. Some of his victories include defeating Chris Gutierrez, Taylor Lapilus, Jean Matsumoto, and Da'Mon Blackshear; however, six out of his seven UFC victories have been by decision.

KHUSHI KAPOOR FLAUNTS TONED ABS IN MALDIVES

'Amma Kanakadurga': Thaman S Brings Devotion to Music as Kanaka Durga Launches Its First Single in Vijayawada

Released during Navratri, the devotional song marks the beginning of the musical journey of Birla Studios and Temple Town Pictures' upcoming film, with Zee Music Company bringing the composition to audiences

On the auspicious occasion of Navratri, Birla Studios and Temple Town Pictures have unveiled 'Amma Kanakadurga', the first song from their upcoming devotional drama Kanaka Durga, in Vijayawada.

Composed by Thaman S and written by lyricist Sira Sri, the song celebrates the divine grace, strength and spiritual significance of Goddess Kanaka Durga, bringing the film's central theme of faith into focus through music.

The launch in Vijayawada carries a significance beyond the occasion. Home to the revered Sri Kanaka Durga Amma Varu temple, the city holds a deep spiritual connection with the Goddess and welcomes lakhs of devotees, particularly during Navratri and Bhavani Deeksha. Unveiling the song here places the composition within the living tradition of devotion that inspires it, connecting the film's musical beginning with the faith of the people.

For Thaman S, the composition is deeply personal. A devoted follower of Goddess Kanaka Durga who regularly visits Vijayawada for her darshan, the composer brings an intimate sense of faith to the song. Through its melody and lyrics, 'Amma Kanakadurga' seeks to capture the emotion of a devotee's prayer, creating a musical expression of reverence that extends beyond the film to the wider devotional landscape. Produced by Birla Studios and Temple Town Pictures, Kanaka Durga stars Allari Naresh and Kajal Choudhary. Directed by Pradeep Maddali and written by BVS Ravi, the film brings together faith, action and emotion in a story rooted in the spiritual significance of the Goddess. The first single introduces audiences to this world through its devotional core.

The film's association with the traditions of Bhavani Deeksha also informed Allari Naresh's preparation for his role. During filming, the actor followed a disciplined lifestyle, abstaining from non-vegetarian food and footwear in keeping with practices associated with the observance.

The song was unveiled at a special event in Vijayawada attended by the cast and crew. With 'Amma Kanakadurga', the film begins its promotional journey by placing devotion and music at the forefront of its connection with audiences. 'Amma Kanakadurga' is now available on Zee Music Company's YouTube channel and leading streaming platforms.
